Senate Extends Skeletonized NRA Despite Long's Extraordinary Efforts—Grass-Roots Meet Offers a Cited for the Republicans

SENATOR HENRY LONG, the Louisiana Kingfish, made a desperate effort to keep the Senate from voting on the skeletonized National Firearms Act (NFA) until next April, but failed. The bill, which would strip the National Rifle Association of its tax-exempt status, passed 70-20 in the Senate on Feb. 10.

Long's effort was a desperate one. He had spent the last few days of the session in a series of meetings with other Republicans, trying to get them to support his amendment. But they were all in vain. The bill passed with a comfortable margin.

Long's amendment would have required the NRA to pay taxes on its income, and to disclose its financial records to the government. It would also have required the NRA to register its members, and to keep records of their names and addresses.

Long's amendment was a direct challenge to the NRA's long-standing policy of tax-exemption. The NRA has argued that it is a charitable organization, and that it should be exempt from taxes. But Long argued that the NRA is a business, and that it should be treated as such.
