To The People of Tyler County

Clyde Smith had a splendid crowd out to hear his first local campaign speech delivered on the courthouse lawn Wednesday night. Jay Kelley, in introducing Tyler County's native son, proved himself, too, to be quite an orator. His high points were enthusiastically received as the speaker of the evening.

Smith has waged an incredibly vigorous campaign since he opened his campaign at Center on April 11, 1936, the first time in many years voters in any of the rural communities have been privileged to have a candidate for Congress come to their homes and discuss personally with them the vital problems of the day. This Woodville man has covered each of the eleven counties this thoroughly and his campaign attracted widespread interest and attention.

Smith declared himself an Oregonian in terms he was confident of the outcome when the voters render their verdict at the polls on July 25. "I have an abiding faith in the people of this 2nd District," Smith said, "and I firmly believe they want a change in representation at Washington. I pledge to all of the people an administration of consistency and sincerity. I shall cherish the trust and honor they will place in me if I am elected, and when I lay down the office the people will find the mantle as unshakable as it was the day I received it."

Jay Kelley Spikes Untrue Report

My attention has been called to a rumor that on account of politics the Citizens State Bank called on me for my loan. Such is not a fact, and has no foundation in fact. In reply to the officers of the above bank, I am making this statement public. I do not know to what extent the rumor has spread.

Several Counties Here to Dies Rally

Delegations from the 11 counties in this congressional district were in Woodville Tuesday night for the "hopsomping" address of United States Representative Martin Dies.

The platform from which he made his talk was large enough to seat 100 persons. Most of them who sat with him were his Tyler county friends, and the friends of the family. Dies' grandfather, Judge William Cline was a resident of Woodville, and many members of the family were born there.
