By FRANK H. SPEARMAN

There comes some of the boys suddenly, and they are laughing at something they have seen in the woods. They are laughing at something they have seen in the woods. They are laughing at something they have seen in the woods.

CHAPTER VII

CARPY walked hurriedly to the edge of the woods where the boys were laughing. He saw something they had seen in the woods. He saw something they had seen in the woods.

"Now, boys, watch out," said Carpy. "I can lay my hands on you. I can lay my hands on you. I can lay my hands on you."

Panama was lifted from the pony and laid on the ground. A colored neckerchief was laid over his face. And with stumbling steps he went back to the farmhouse. Two sawhorses had been set to support the door, and on it Panama lay at rest. His companions made ready to start back for the fire line.

"Now, boys, watch out," said Carpy. "I can lay my hands on you. I can lay my hands on you. I can lay my hands on you."

They would have you for cut out. But he added, speaking to Carpy, "I can lay my hands on you. I can lay my hands on you. I can lay my hands on you."

The injured man was carried to the farmhouse and was propped up on a bench outside the doorway. He looked at Carpy wistfully. "Tell me, Doc," he begged, "have they found Panama yet?"

"They have, Jake. And he was hurt. I did what little I could do for him here. But I've not got what needed here for treatment. Panama's got to go to the hospital. I'm hitching on the wagon."

Spot's started up on the "I've not got to see him before he dies. Don't let me start till I see him. Don't let me start till I see him. Don't let me start till I see him."

Carpy tried to calm the patient. He might as well have tried to stop a forest fire by talking to it. "Keep your horse quiet, Jake. You mustn't have any excitement. You mustn't have any excitement. You mustn't have any excitement."

"A dreadful light dawned on the barrier. The faint jaw-dropped. His hollow eyes stared at the scene. He cried out, 'Panama's dead!'

The word rang in Carpy's ears for many a day. Jake, he said brusquely. "I've tried to soften things for you, but you won't listen. You won't listen. You won't listen."

There was a dead silence. The words of that text no longer on his mind. There was a dead silence. The words of that text no longer on his mind.

The light in the forest glared in Carpy's eyes. He had a flash of realization. A flash of realization. A flash of realization.

There was a dead silence. The words of that text no longer on his mind. There was a dead silence. The words of that text no longer on his mind.

There was a dead silence. The words of that text no longer on his mind. There was a dead silence. The words of that text no longer on his mind.
