Ida Larimore

What had happened to her? She slipped down from the stool and glanced at Jim with a mischievous expression. "You could walk a mile, couldn't you?" she asked. "You look as though you could. I mean you aren't a cripple!" "I might manage a mile," Jim hesitated. "But I don't like to impose."

"Forget it, Jerry likes company," she said. "You can't miss the place, can you?" She disappeared through an opening in the rear partition of the store and Jim heard, indistinctly, a murmured conversation. His new acquaintances, he thought, were capable young ladies. He couldn't with decency refuse her friendly suggestion. Whatever his personal inclinations might be, he was about to visit Meadowbrook.

Why not go? Impulse pointed in that direction. Personal inclination, he had to admit, was in favor of seeing the project through. But he had foregone impulses. He had resolved, less than an hour ago, to have no further dealings with treacherous inclinations. He was going back to Long Island and ask Lenore to marry him. Kay would approve wholeheartedly. Vic, her husband, would give him his blessing and a check. He and Lenore would be married and live happily, live ever after.

Before he had time to cogitate further, the girl reappeared, followed by a thin, dapper young man with sandy hair and a prominent Adam's apple.

"Herb's ready," she said with such pride in the success of her suggestion that Jim's hesitancy vanished.

"Thank you," he said, smiling, and turned to the thin young man with the sandy hair. "It's good of you to take me along. I appreciate it."

"Don't mention it," he said brusquely. "Glad to do a favor for any friend of Dolly's."

He went with them to the door. "Thank you for everything," Jim said. Her eyes crinkled merrily. She smiled her wide gay smile. "So long, Mr. Barrymore," she said. "Don't forget what I said you to do."

"I'll remember," he promised.

Her message to Tommy! Jim followed the sandy young man to a Ford coupe parked at the curb. Who was Tommy? he wondered. He was in duty bound to deliver the message. Perhaps the MacPhersons could help him. He folded his long legs inside the car and leaned through the open window to wave Dolly a friendly farewell.

SCHOOL NOTES

Mrs. Lindley's first grade room gave a very enjoyable program Tuesday morning in chapel. The program was as follows: song by all; songs two girls; the parts of a year; a group song; a group song; "Battis" (a play about Boston, first grade); two girls' song; choral singing. Declainers had their semi-final elimination. The girls who were chosen were Joy Brown, Mary Alma Wright, Eddie Jewel Brown, Maxine Holton, Bettie Sue Swearingen, Katherine Janet Rainey, Katherine Stanley, Ida Mae Emith and Marie Butler.

The boys chosen: Monroe Prescott, Gerald Smith, George Stanley, James Best, Howard Brandin, Bill Lusk, Vernon Polk, Dick Davis.

The music memory tryout was held Monday. Winners: Les Sims, Yancey Cobb, Marshall Anglin, Adie Felt, Hattie, Bill Dusk, Maurine Pedigo, and Opal Durham were chosen.

Mrs. B. V. Ferguson surprised the first grade with a valentine party February 12. She gave them heart-shaped candy and they had a valentine box.

Chester and Woodville boys and girls played baseball at Woodville Thursday. Chester beat 7-1. Dorothy Coleman is absent from school with mumps.

Miss Santell's third grade class is glad to welcome Leroy Rippey and Edna Alvia. The third grade boys' talent was working for the county meet.

The second grade class gave a new pupil, Joyce Rhoden from Alvin. The sixth grade welcomed Glad from Port Arthur.

Woodville Locals

Sup and Mrs. C. V. Compton arrived home Thursday night from New Orleans.

Mrs. Richard Marshall spent the week end with her husband in Highlands.

Miss Flo Whitman, with Miss Marguerite Rainey came up from Houston to spend the week end with the latter's parents, Mrs. G. T. Rainey, near the Gravelton road near the Gravelton road.

What had happened to her? She slipped down from the stool and glanced at Jim with a mischievous expression. "You could walk a mile, couldn't you?" she asked. "You look as though you could. I mean you aren't a cripple!" "I might manage a mile," Jim hesitated. "But I don't like to impose."

"Forget it, Jerry likes company," she said. "You can't miss the place, can you?" She disappeared through an opening in the rear partition of the store and Jim heard, indistinctly, a murmured conversation. His new acquaintances, he thought, were capable young ladies. He couldn't with decency refuse her friendly suggestion. Whatever his personal inclinations might be, he was about to visit Meadowbrook.

Why not go? Impulse pointed in that direction. Personal inclination, he had to admit, was in favor of seeing the project through. But he had foregone impulses. He had resolved, less than an hour ago, to have no further dealings with treacherous inclinations. He was going back to Long Island and ask Lenore to marry him. Kay would approve wholeheartedly. Vic, her husband, would give him his blessing and a check. He and Lenore would be married and live happily, live ever after.

Before he had time to cogitate further, the girl reappeared, followed by a thin, dapper young man with sandy hair and a prominent Adam's apple.

"Herb's ready," she said with such pride in the success of her suggestion that Jim's hesitancy vanished.

"Thank you," he said, smiling, and turned to the thin young man with the sandy hair. "It's good of you to take me along. I appreciate it."

"Don't mention it," he said brusquely. "Glad to do a favor for any friend of Dolly's."

He went with them to the door. "Thank you for everything," Jim said. Her eyes crinkled merrily. She smiled her wide gay smile. "So long, Mr. Barrymore," she said. "Don't forget what I said you to do."

"I'll remember," he promised.

Her message to Tommy! Jim followed the sandy young man to a Ford coupe parked at the curb. Who was Tommy? he wondered. He was in duty bound to deliver the message. Perhaps the MacPhersons could help him. He folded his long legs inside the car and leaned through the open window to wave Dolly a friendly farewell.

Do Not Fly Kites Near Electric Wires

- Boys and girls, flying kites near electric wires is dangerous. Don't take chances. Follow these suggestions and be safe:
- Do not use wire or metallic kite strings.
  - Do not use metal kite sticks.
  - Do not fly kites with wet string or in damp, rainy weather.
  - Do not climb poles to get tangled kites.
  - Do not poke sticks at kites caught in wires or try to pull them down by their tails.
  - safer of all, do your kites in parks, playgrounds or pastures, clear away from power lines.
