First, there's an idea. Improved motor fuels, better motor oils are no exception to that rule. So Humble's continuous improvement policy puts a premium on ideas. First, a technician gets an idea; he and his fellows elaborate it; theorize about it, satisfy themselves it's sound. Then they test it in the laboratory, that graveyard of many ideas which look good on paper. If the idea passes the laboratory test, the supreme test of all awaits it—the open road. The new product, the improved product, goes through a gruelling grind no ordinary driving would ever give it. Then—if it stands up—it's offered to you.

When, therefore, we invite you to test our Humble products in your own we're confident you'll like them. We have tested them ourselves, and we know they're good.
