THE REBUILT BLUE EAGLE

THE REBUILT BLUE EAGLE

measures designed to improve the public free school system of Texas. In order to make it possible for the poorest of this state to be accorded adequate opportunities for education...

THE REBUILT BLUE EAGLE

I shall advocate the conservation of our natural resources. I do not think it fair to the future generation to waste and destroy the natural resources of this state. They should be conserved as a heritage to be handed down to our children.

THE REBUILT BLUE EAGLE

I am in favor of strict enforcement of the laws of this state regulating the control of the liquor traffic. Nothing has done more to demoralize the youth of the state and nation than the immoderate use of intoxicating beverages. We may not be able to entirely prohibit the dispensation and use of intoxicating liquors, but we surely can go far in the direction of controlling and regulating the liquor traffic in this state.

THE REBUILT BLUE EAGLE

I have discussed with you frankly the principles of the platform upon which my candidacy is based. I shall investigate me, consider my candidacy and if you can conscientiously support me, I shall appreciate it and feel under every obligation to support the people of this district. I shall certainly do my best to serve you.

"I'm not just that, Don. You see, I've loved my mother above anything on earth, yet she hurt him unmercifully. And though it wasn't my fault, perhaps, I hurt him, too. I think he doesn't dare let me get near him any more. Don't you understand? He's afraid of being hurt again."

So she mailed her postal, hoping for the hour of relenting had not come. But despite this disappointment, Nora was very happy that summer. Don was always glad to remember how happy she had been. As the months passed, her new home became almost as perfect as she dreamed it could be, and even Tom Littlefield admitted that the "ball room" was not too big.

"And it's cozy, isn't it?" asked Leonora, determined to make the old carpenter give in.

"O! It's cozy enough," he assented, albeit grudgingly; "but I still think, if you was to ask me, Miss Mason, that it's all out of proportion to the size of the kitchen."

"But we don't live in the kitchen," Nora retorted.

"And I ain't ever heard of anybody livin' in a ball room, either," snipped the old man.

He was a frequent caller, as was the notary at the Port. The latter had a standing invitation to Sunday dinner, which was quite as likely to be served on the beach as in the banquet hall. Afterwards he would find his way into the big living room and browse among the books, sometimes reading aloud from his beloved poets to Nora, sometimes reading from "Peter Rabbit" to the boys.

"He's as good as a grandfather," said Don one Sunday afternoon when he found the old man with both children in his lap; and then wished he hadn't spoken because Nora's face clouded at the words.

The summer drifted by. September came, and with it the chance Don was hoping for, something he had kept secret from his wife fearing to cause her disappointment should it not work out. For Nora had hinted to the little boys that Santa Claus might possibly bring them a "baby sister," and Don was determined that his mother should not be dragged to Europe if such a step could be avoided. He knew that the "Letters from Cape Town" had proved even more popular than the American editor expected.

"There was no reason to think he would not be amenable to the suggestion that there was a vast amount of interesting material on their own West. Don planned a second issue of the "Seeking America First" submitted the idea, and waited impatiently for the verdict.

Not knowing that the great man was away on a vacation, the letter received long in coming, but it brought good news. The editor considered this plan "most interesting," and requested that Don stop off in Chicago on the way West to consult personally with him who had been over the ground recently and might give him some valuable data. And would he plan so that the first article could be run in February?

Nora wept with relief when she heard the news—Nora, who so seldom gave way to tears.

"I've been dreading so awfully to start out again," she told him, "but this is different. If, as you say, we can stay at San Diego until after New Year's, everything will be easy. I can settle you somewhere, and then go to a hospital for the event. And next spring we can come home for a long summer. Don't mind my crying, Don. It's only the heavenly relief."

"You poor dear homie!" said Don tenderly. And then added: "If all goes well, darling, we'll install a furnace here next summer so we can stay as late as you want to in the fall."

"I believe," smiled Nora, wiping away the last of her foolish tears, "I believe you've discovered the advantages of a home yourself, Don!"

Well, mused Don, turning away from his wife's eyes, it was a boy, and it had not brought them one cent, but it was more than that. Three years old, and his grandfather had not expressed the slightest interest in his existence. It wasn't in Don to comprehend how anyone could be so stubbornly resentful, so unkind, impatient at the situation he was once said as much, and Nora answered:

"It's not just that, Don. You see, I've loved my mother above anything on earth, yet she hurt him unmercifully. And though it wasn't my fault, perhaps, I hurt him, too. I think he doesn't dare let me get near him any more. Don't you understand? He's afraid of being hurt again."

"I believe," smiled Nora, wiping away the last of her foolish tears, "I believe you've discovered the advantages of a home yourself, Don!"

They reached Chicago on a bleak November morning. Wind was blowing across Lake Michigan in wintry gusts, and the weather man predicted snow. It came, a blizzard out of the north. For two days they were storm-bound in a boarding house run by an old nurse of Constance Venable's—some of the many who had been helped, gratefully, by the old nurse.

On the third afternoon when the city was digging out of snow drifts, the nurse's maid, a young girl named solid behind that false-front roof. There's weight to this snow, Nora. I hope—

"There's our theater ahead now."

"What Don hoped was lost in a gust of wind that fairly blew them into the lobby of the theater.

"Perhaps we'd better go right back," gasped Nora. "The wind is certainly getting worse. It wouldn't surprise me if it stormed again."

"No, either; but you're completely out of breath, dear. Let's get inside and rest for a few minutes. I'll be easier going home with the wind at our backs, you know. We can sit in the last row, Nora, and slip out any time we're bored. This speed to rest after that fight with the elements."

This was sane logic, so they went inside.

"Looks as if all the kiddies of the neighborhood had come in out of the storm," Don whispered as their eyes grew accustomed to the dimness. "Why didn't we think to bring the boys?"

Nora smiled. Don always regretted his sons' absence when other children were in evidence. She said, softly: "They're better off where they are. There's such a crowd, and the air is terrible. Why—?—Why—?"

Her voice rose a little. Her head lifted. Later Nora was to remember that she had thought herself ill because the whole building seemed to tremble and the roof looked as if it were crumbling up, slowly.

The most curious sensation, a sort of chill, ran over her—all in a second, of course, for Don was already on his feet, holding her wrist in a grip that tortured. Just as they reached the lobby the crash came. And then a cry went up behind them—a cry that was to ring in Nora's ears for months. It sounded, she thought, like an awful and terrifying wave of protest from a single throat.

They were in the street. Already a throng of morose onlookers had gathered. "Poor! Oh, fortunate people!" were pouring out of the doomed theater. It seemed to Nora, sprang up like magic. . . .

"Fire!" were there, trying to rattle off space. . . . pushing them back. It was then that Don, who had been stunned into a horrified silence, roused himself with a convulsive shudder. He turned to Nora—looked down into her upturned face.

"No one had ever before heard of either the White Gate or the white lions so everyone who received one of these invitations was curious to know whether the latter were real or just statues.

A few timid citizens were dubious about the propriety of attending such a function on Easter Sunday, but that didn't bother several thousand others who entirely overlooked the fact that it was also April 1. So they swarmed to Tower hill in bonnets, coats, and on foot and began inquiring eagerly of the gatekeepers where the White Gate was.

As soon as the gatekeepers saw the invitations they immediately recognized the hoax and they greatly enjoyed the opportunity of answering "April Fool!" to the eager inquirers. In fact, it has been suspected, although never proved, that some of the gatekeepers were the perpetrators of the hoax.

This review discloses that for the nation as a whole, the railroads last year paid $1,183,851,469 for the more than 70,000 different items which they use. Materials, supplies and fuel cost $98,589,000 and expenditures for all new equipment (except that constructed in railway shops) totaled $169,978,468. More than 10,000 towns and cities located in the 3,972 counties of the United States received direct benefits from this large volume of railroad buying.

J. E. WHEELER

It was with sorrow that many Woodville people learned last Thursday of the death of J. E. Wheeler. A few weeks ago he leased the Eaves Market and was here but a short while when he became ill and was hurried to a Beaumont hospital. No one thought it was serious, but on Wednesday, May 18th, he passed away after a 10-day illness. Interment was in the Old Hardin cemetery after funeral services in his home church in Kountze. Mr. Wheeler was 67 years of age and his wife, Mrs. Julia Wheeler, three sons, W. D. of High Island, E. H. of Kountze and Jack of Silsbee have the sympathy of all.

L. L. CAMPBELL

Many will recall L. L. Campbell, printer and operator who was in Woodville a number of years ago. He passed away at his home in Brookland Monday and funeral was to be at 2 p. m. Tuesday. A 9-year grandson with his parents from Houston was playing with other boys near a pond, at about the noon hour on Tuesday and was drowned. He slipped down a slippery bank and efforts of his playmates were futile in rescuing. The little body was carried to Jasper, then transferred to Houston for burial. He is survived by his parents, Mrs. Glen W. Stark and a brother, "Red" sister. Deep sympathy goes out to the doubly bereaved family.

Pennington were co-hostesses at the home of the latter on Friday, May 18th, at a morning coffee and miscellaneous shower for Mrs. Wallace Sholars. The house was lovely with cut flowers and the table covered with lace, a centerpiece of larkspur, snapdragons and queens lace, was lovely in its appointments. Mrs. Bennie Barclay presided over the tea service. It will be remembered that Mrs. Sholars lost her home and its contents when it was struck by lightning and now that she has started her another home her friends were anxious to show their affection for her and delight that she was to be again a home maker among them. She received many dainty and lovely gifts. In the afternoon Mrs. Pennington was hostess to the Bridge club at three tables, serving a salad course.
