IF AND when Uncle Sam retires postmasters of overage and on a pension the thought presents will it be a government pension, or an old-age assistance affair such as is in practice in Texas?

STRANGE HOW age is viewed over the business world. A man looking for a position as head of a great educational system and only 38 years of age, is turned down instantly—not old enough. The same man looking for work in the mercantile world—too old, can you beat it?

WITHIN a given time of less than six months residents of Tyler county have been in terrible automobile accidents, death resulting in the accident to Spurger citizens last week. It appears no part of all of America is free from disaster, and it also appears there's no way by law to put a stop to these terrible affairs.

THERE IS a move on to banish postmasters of a rather uncertain age. That department of the Government evidently is going to join up with the mercantile world and imagines young men should be postmasters. Ah, the report we read did not say if the aged postmasters let out were to be added to pensioners of your Uncle Sam.

NO, we have received no word the play, "Gone With the Wind" is to be displayed in Woodville. Personally, this writer would rather see a good western. Of course, this only represents our particular like or dislike. The picture will be shown in Houston and Beaumont and many of our citizens undoubtedly will make the trip to see and hear it. Their reports will be anticipated.

JUST ABOUT so often a tree is missed on the courthouse lawn. It died and was therefore cut down. The last two pine trees were large enough for good mill logs. That reminds us of a story on one of our sawmill operators out on a hunting trip. All at once he came to a very splendid pine tree. He stopped, mentally sealing and exclaimed, "Well, I didn't know there were any trees like this one left in Tyler county. Ah, I must find out who owns it and I'll buy it."

IF WOODVILLE citizens will get busy the centennial may become one of the greatest celebrations ever put over in East Texas. If we can't make history with a dogwood show, why not with bluebonnets, Indian Paint Brush, Grape Myrtles or some common flower—the rose, for instance. Anyway, if Woodville is to actually celebrate its one hundredth birthday with visitors numbering from 10 to 20,000, the natives have got to do their own starting. No other community will do it for us. It must be put over by the entire citizenry. It is expected the Town Forum will make the start.

WHAT FINLAND wants is not a couple of wads of sympathy or a memento all tied up with pink ribbons, not a few sacks of flour or possibly sugar or a wallet containing a few thousand dollars and a wish they whip Russia, rather several thousand soldiers equipped for war, a few air planes to combat three to five hundred daily flying over their wrecking cities and combatants. A shipload of ammunition for cannon, rifles, etc. In this time if the right kind of aid is forthcoming Russia will be able to fight back to Finland what the checks, what the Christian nation has not got busy and OCASIONALLY THE daily press tells of a drunk actually being punished in a court trial. That, however, does not mean a thing to drivers who know they'll happen to be unfortunate and hit someone. It is supposed nobody actually courts disaster, but far too many are willing to take a chance. It's taking a chance, and also being a poor guesser as to distance, that is to blame in hundreds of cases. Then there is the other class of drivers who should never have been issued a license. We talked with the head of the road patrol in an San Antonio Christmas week, and asked him how this abuse of licenses was to be overcome. He answered us quick as a flash and said: "Willard, it is you newspaper men who can make the issuance of licenses to the proper people a good and necessary practice. There should be several kinds of tests given and those who can't make the grade turned down and refused a license, be they banker, preacher, teacher or business men, irrespective of their of their social, religious or business standing." That from a man we've known for over 20 years and who has been a highway patrol man for over 12 years.

"Neither a Prophet Nor Son of Prophet"

At the end of a day's inspection trip to reservoirs and reservoir sites along the upper Trinity River, Brig. Gen. John J. Kingman, assistant chief of Army engineers, checked in for a night at the hotel Adolphus in Dallas Friday. Accompanied by two Army engineers who completed the recent survey of the Trinity, he visited Eagle Mountain and Bridgeport Lakes, Lake Dallas, and a number of possible reservoir sites. He said that Saturday he would make a zigzag trip back and forth across the river to his mouth.

"I'm neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet—I won't talk," was the only comment he offered on the Trinity at the end of his first day's trip.

N COLLEGE PLAY AT NACOGDOCHE.

Douglas Swearingen and Ewing ones, Hillister, are members of the cast of the Stephen F. Austin college dramatic club's production of "Ceiling Zero," which will be presented during the latter part of February. They are sons of Mrs. J. M. Swearingen and Mrs. O. E. Jones. Both are graduates of the Woodville high school. Otis Allison of Warren is assisting in back-stage work.

Woodville Locals

D. T. Bartlett, sanitarian with the bi-county health unit states that 25 families who are borrowers of the F. S. A. will have their home sanitary conditions improved, especially the water supply and disposal systems. The county has been granted an allotment of $2,500.00 for this work.

Sincere sympathy is felt for Mrs. D. P. Roth in the death of their baby son on the 24th of January. Mrs. Roth will be remembered as Miss Elizabeth Crosby of Warren.

Miss C. L. L. was the winner of the $100.00 prize in the Million

Experienced and Sound Judgment

It is probably the best judge of the temper of the people and their representatives in Congress, at any given time, of any man in the United States. He has an uncanny perspective, which enables him to disregard the clamor of voluble and vociferous minorities and find the desires of the submerged majority. Perhaps this is because he is a typical American, neither radical nor reactionary, but progressive and forward-looking.

Garner would make a great President because of his gifts of leadership and his judgment. It is well known that most men who have been in public life were men of good will, patriotically interested in the welfare of their country. He has always found a zest in sitting down with men who review problems from diverse angles, men of different experiences. He believes that out of such deliberations come sound, practical and beneficial proposals. He takes to such counsel tables his own fidelity to principles, clarity of reasoning and ability to get at facts.

His judgment of men is excellent. When he became Speaker, in 1931, he demonstrated his ability to choose men for important assignments, finding the proper man to do a job. Men were placed in roles for which they were best qualified. He has always liked to reward merit in young men, and this gave him the opportunity. Although the Democrats had a fragile majority of only three votes overnight, he weighed them into a cohesive, fighting organization.

Best Judge of People's Temper

Garner as President would be a great relief to the people. He has often said that most men who have been in public life were men of good will, patriotically interested in the welfare of their country. He has always found a zest in sitting down with men who review problems from diverse angles, men of different experiences. He believes that out of such deliberations come sound, practical and beneficial proposals. He takes to such counsel tables his own fidelity to principles, clarity of reasoning and ability to get at facts.

Has Vivid "Sense of Humanity"

He believes that out of such deliberations come sound, practical and beneficial proposals. He takes to such counsel tables his own fidelity to principles, clarity of reasoning and ability to get at facts.

Far-Flung Network of Contacts

Because his acquaintanceship in all parts of the country is second to none, I believe this far-flung network of contacts and knowledge of men would make it possible for Garner to call into service men of outstanding ability for his cabinet and other administrative places. His standard for judicial appointments would be high. He would be especially anxious to find proper men for diplomatic posts. His long experience in the House Foreign Affairs Committee imbued him with a deep and informed interest in international relations.

502 Cases Small Pox In Texas in 1939

Smallpox, historic scourge of nations, is still an important health problem, says Dr. Geo. W. Cox, State health officer. The number of reported cases last year in Texas, according to reports reaching State health department, totaled 502, which is the lowest of the decade 1929-1939, except for the year 1936.

Prevalence of smallpox in Texas in 1939 accounted for 23.5 of the nation's total of 15,000 cases, although Texas' percentage of United States population is only 4.7. In 1936, Texas, with a population of 6,300,000, had six times the prevalence of smallpox in England, Wales and Germany, with a population total of 108,000,000.

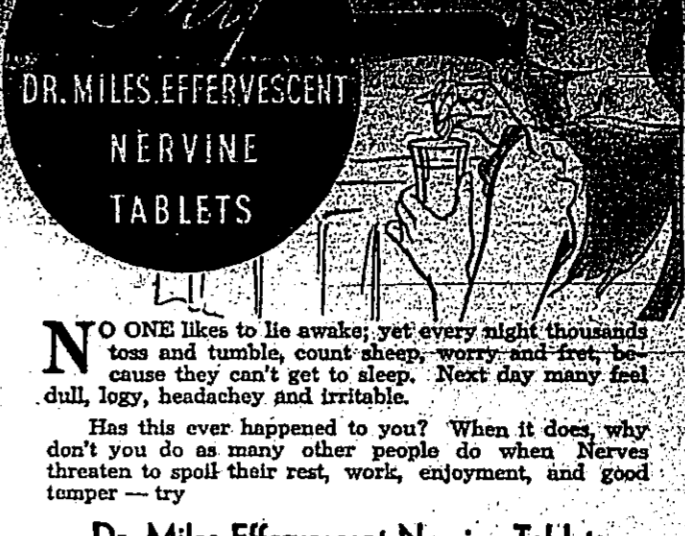

In view of the success of other nations of the world in practically stamping out smallpox, the situation prevailing in the United States and Texas reveals indifference to the existence of a disease which can be prevented and controlled by well-known methods. No other distase of mankind is so easily controlled. The efficacy of vaccination needs no further demonstration, and with modern methods, this simple prophylactic procedure causes little or no discomfort. The cost is so small as to make it readily available and within the means of everyone. With a proper regard for, and the application of, this effective means of prevention, there is no doubt that smallpox can be eliminated from Texas.

The answer to the question "Why do we have smallpox?" is found in three words: failure to vaccinate. "One of the explanations," says Dr. Cox, "for the persistence of smallpox in this country is the failure to vaccinate."

Autumn stared at the ghostly blur of a heavily flowered white rose bush. "If you had told me all you knew—when I first came home," she said, "we might have been spared much of what happened tonight."

Hector drew a deep and unhappy breath. "You forget, my child, that there is no such thing as loyalty still left in the lives of some of us," he said. "I did not tell you everything I knew, it was because I could not tell it."

"It doesn't matter, after all," she said. "It is too late now."

"On the contrary," he replied, "it is still too early. You must understand, my child, that I am not a man of many words, but I am not the kind that goes on forever when I know there is no hope for me."

Autumn laughed dryly and got to her feet. "Let's take our ride before it gets too warm," she suggested.

Linda stretched in staccato luxury and rose from the couch. "Which—being interpreted—means, for heaven's sake, lay off!" she said, and went with Autumn to prepare for the ride.

On the following morning, Bruce Landon's foreman drove his car in at the gates of the Castle. Linda Parr had departed for home only an hour before, and Autumn was cutting rows in the secluded recess of the garden. It was no usual day for Bruce Landon's foreman to visit the Dean ranch, and a swift shock of apprehensiveness for Bruce stop before the house brought Jarvis to his window. He saw a man in a dark suit and a woman in a light dress standing in the driveway. He turned from his window and seated himself in his big chair before his desk. Presently he heard a knock at his door. He opened the door and in a moment Bruce Landon presented himself in the library doorway.

Jarvis looked up as his visitor announced himself. It might have been Geoffrey Landon himself, he mused, but he was not. He was a man in a dark suit and a woman in a light dress standing in the driveway.

"I don't know what you are talking about," she said.

Autumn sat at the piano and played softly while Linda read. Jarvis had left the house immediately after breakfast. He had a great deal to do, and he was not in the mood for conversation.

"What's the matter now, Linda?" Autumn asked, turning from her work.

"It's a bad sign when a girl begins to live vicariously in erotic poetry," she said.
