Prologue to Love

By MARTHA OSTENSO

MARTHA OSTENSO—WNU SERVICE

He removed a fragile, folded sheet from the yellowed envelope that enclosed it.

"Why haven't you told me about this before?" Autumn asked him. Hector flushed painfully. "You forget, my dear, that your father was my friend. It has been difficult enough for me to decide to tell you even now. Nothing but your resolution to leave this country and spend the rest of your days in England convinced me that the time had come for me to place these letters in your hand."

He unfolded the letter and took from within it a short note that had been enclosed with the longer one.

"This," he said, handing Autumn the shorter one, "you may read before the other."

Autumn took it in trembling fingers and let her eyes dwell upon the delicate palming script.

"Hector, my dear friend (Millicent had written), I do not think that I shall recover. Please do not forget your promise to me. I trust that the task I bequeath to you will bring you unhappiness. In gratitude, Millicent."

With unseeing eyes, Autumn stared for moments at the slip of paper in her hand.

"Now, my dear—you may read this," Hector said, handing her the letter he held.

When at last she was able to govern her emotions, the phrases seemed to burn into her eyes with a ghostly incandescence.

"To my beloved daughter, Autumn (she read). When you read these words, if you ever do read them, it will be because Hector Carigan has deemed it proper that you should do so. They concern things which I myself should have wished to tell you if events and circumstances had made it necessary—or possible.

"I want you to know, dear Autumn, that neither your father nor Geoffrey Landon was to blame in the unfortunate accident that took Geoffrey's life. Geoffrey had done his utmost to get away and forget me—and help me forget him. Hector can tell you why it was impossible for him to go. Since that terrible day, in the spring, your father has brooded constantly over the death of the man he once called friend. I fear that it may become an obsession from which he will never escape. I am the one who is to blame, Autumn, if any one is to blame for hopeless love.

"I can never tell you, my darling girl, how love came to me at last, after years of groping. I can only tell you that it came, after you were born, but that I never forgot the vows that had made me the wife of your father. I can tell you, too, that love—when it is love—is a woman's whole life and being. She can never escape it though she go to the ends of the earth.

"I do not know what lies before you here. Jane Landon is a strong-willed woman and she has already made it clear that she intends to continue at her own ranch, discharge all her obligations, and bring up her boy in the valley. You and he will be growing up together, Autumn, and the time will come when you must be friends or enemies—according to the will of his mother and your father, who hate each other now. It is my wish, Autumn, that you see things clearly and without prejudice, and that you refuse to be influenced by this tragedy of the past. I should like to think that you would be a friend of Geoffrey's boy, and help to pay the debt of your devoted mother, Millicent."

By the time Autumn had reached the end of the letter, the words were moving like a dimly silver caravan beyond her tears. The elation of the dying! Perhaps Millicent had even hoped that there might be more than friendship between her daughter and Geoffrey Landon's son—and a fluctuation of that destiny which had begun in her and Geoffrey. Autumn glanced across at Hector where he had seated himself again at the windows, and folded the letter pensively in her hands.

"Thank you, Hector," she said, "for showing me this."

He did not turn from the window, and Autumn laid the letter beside the packet on the table and went to him.

"You've done your part," she said, "and I'm grateful to you."

He turned and put an arm about her. For a moment he seemed on the point of speaking. Then he patted her shoulder affectionately and turned away.

"I'll be going, I think," he said brokenly. "Come to see me."

Without another word he left her, picked up his hat from the small sofa on his way out, and walked away, his thin, straight back soldierly and unflinching. From the windows, Autumn watched him go, her teeth biting down into her quivering lip. Then she turned and went to her room.

Bruce Landon, in loose gray flannels, swung his considerable length of limb out of his modest automobile and proceeded carefully up the steep steps to Hector Carigan's door. He was somewhat mystified, though he had resisted any suspicion of intimacy by his urgency with Hector. Hector had pressed him to which Bruce supposed, Landon, admires as having belonged to Geoffrey, or perhaps Constance.

"I'm glad you came, my boy," Hector said, drawing himself up solemnly and looking at Bruce with a penetrating eye. "Come along in. I have an appetizer waiting for you."

"Right, Hector!" Bruce said, following his host into the dining room where one end of a long refectory table of solid, gloomy old oak was spread tastily with fine linen and silver and china, and a surprising array of edibles.

Bruce had here, always, a disconcerting feeling that he was about to see the writhings of antiquity emerge from the draperies on the walls and repossess with jealous hands their treasures that furnished Hector's home.

He stood by while Hector filled two glasses, one of which he handed his guest with a courtly bow.

"To good fellowship, my boy!" Hector proposed, and held his glass for Bruce to touch with his own.

They drained their glasses at once and Bruce held his forward with a smile.

"One more, Hector—to the spirits of the past!" He waved a hand toward the tapestried walls as he spoke.

Hector looked at him quickly, then filled the glasses again with an excitement in his movements that caused Bruce to wonder. But he smiled across the top of his glass as he bowed once more to Bruce and drank.

"Well," he said, when the glasses were empty again, "you must be ready for supper, my boy. Let's sit in."

"I hope I shall never be hungrier," Bruce replied and took the chair to which his host invited him with a wave of the hand.

The wine was excellent, as were the cold meats and the snafes. Hector's first excitement seemed to subside as the meal progressed, and he talked in a leisurely fashion.

They talked of Jarvis Dean's death and the impressive funeral that had followed, of the Dean estate and of Autumn's plans to live in England—but always in an impersonal tone that gave Bruce no hint of what was in the old man's mind.

When they rose from the table, Hector spread a cloth tidily over the dishes and led Bruce into the drawing room, closing the dining room door behind him.

"The skeletons will be at the feast," Bruce thought, smiling to himself.

The evening having turned cool, Hector had kindled a fire in the pine logs in the Dutch tiled fireplace, and now they seated themselves before it with their brandy and cigarettes.

"I suppose you would be uncomfortable in the presence of modern furniture," Bruce remarked, glancing idly about the room. "You have lived so long with the ghosts of the past."

A strange glow warmed Hector's eyes. "In more ways than one, my boy," he observed pointedly. "But I have never permitted my ghosts to enter my mind. I have had my cup, now—" he pointed to an elaborately wrought chalice that stood on the top of a china closet—"who knows but what the death of some tall, courtier may have been drunk from his brim? But does it make the cup less beautiful, less precious to our time?"

"Rather not," Bruce replied. "On the contrary," Hector said, warming to his subject, "is a dim avenue down which we may walk and find the diverging paths of terror and beauty and passion. If we stand at the entrance to that avenue and peer within, remote times telescope into our own immediate past, so that with clear eyes we may note the decades of antiquity and of a few decades ago have the same values. Or do you follow me, my boy?"

Bruce regarded his host with mounting curiosity.

"I believe I do," Bruce said, swept involuntarily into Hector's stately mood.

Behind Closed Doors

CANCER TALK

There is still too much behind closed doors talk about cancer, Dr. Geo. W. Cox declared one day last week urging Texans to make the most of educational opportunities which will be offered during April, proclaimed by Gov. W. Lee O'Daniel as cancer control month.

We cannot fight cancer successfully by hiding from it. On the other hand, by overcoming fear and lack of knowledge, the campaign against this disease will be half won, the doctor is reported to have said. Reliance upon lightning warfare will not defeat cancer. It is only a relentless crusade carried on over a period of years that will succeed in wearing down the death rate from this disease. Such a crusade requires more courage and widespread knowledge than our people possess at this time.

Vital statistics records of the State Health Department show that cancer mortality is steadily increasing. Statistics for the past half decade, 1933 through 1938, record an upswing in the cancer death rate from 64.55 per hundred thousand in 1933, to 66.3 in 1934, to 68.5 in 1945, to 73.6 in 1936, to 72.8 in 1937, to a high of 74.3 in 1938. The Texas cancer death toll in 1938 was 4,959 as compared with 3,863 in 1933.

Whether or not this increase in cancer mortality will continue depends upon the effort every man, woman and child will put forth to learn more about cancer, its symptoms and its cure.

Free educational literature on cancer may be obtained by writing the State Health Department, Austin, Co-ordinator of the Cancer Control Drive in Texas during the month of April.

PARTNERS IN A GREAT TEXAS ENTERPRISE

Oil

TEXAS farmers and ranchers received last year from oil men the huge sum of $132,478,000 for leases and royalties as their share in this partnership.

All but seven of Texas' 256 counties now share in this cash return from leases and production on more than 50,000,000 acres of Texas land.

Then, too, the Texas farmers and ranchers sell to oil workers and their families more than $60,000,000 worth of farm and livestock products each year.

Thus the farmers and ranchers of our state receive nearly 200 million dollars a year as their share of oil's total expenditure of 750 million dollars annually in Texas. These 200 million dollars in turn flow into every channel of Texas trade.

The Texas farmer and rancher and the oil man are partners in the development of Texas.

Study Club

The Woman's Study Club met Tuesday, April 9, with Mrs. T. A. Houston, hostess. Mrs. C. E. Smith and Mrs. J. F. Shivers were in charge of the program which consisted of the study of "Safety and International Good Will."

On April 16, the Livingston Study Club will present a guest program at a joint meeting to be held in the home making room at the Woodville high school.

At this meeting there will be a love offering to be contributed by the local members which will be sent to general headquarters in celebration of fifty years federation.

The club voted that the spring entertainment should be a picnic at Highway Park on April 23rd.

Mrs. T. J. Risinger was elected delegate and Mrs. F. B. Sullivan alternate to the convention to be held in Galveston on April 25, 26 and 27.

Dr. Hipp, on April thirtieth, will speak on the Crippled Children at Marlin. Arrangements as to time and place of the lecture will be announced later.

The Study Club sponsored a window display contest during the Dogwood Festival, and a prize of $2.00 was given to the first whose window was first place. Bracken's Hardware won first with J. B. Best, Henry Evans, and Woodville Flower Shop getting honorable mention.

Baptist Church News

The revival meeting now in progress at the Baptist church is being attended by increasing congregation and the interest is deepening.

We are especially pleased with the fine co-operation that is being given the meeting by the members of the other churches of the town and the people of adjacent communities.

Two bus loads of people came in to the meeting Tuesday evening in a body. Five little girls in the group rendered two special numbers. Also a group of men from Corrigan were present the same evening.

The pastor and the two friends assisting in the meeting attended the workers conference at Dauseta Tuesday after the preaching hour.

Neal Community

This vicinity was visited by a very hard rain Saturday evening. Water fell in torrents for forty-two minutes. Farms were greatly damaged by the breaking of terraces.

Gene Rhodes and family were week end guests in the P. H. Rhodes home.

Rev. J. P. Dale of Warren filed his regular monthly appointment at the Neal church, Saturday and Sunday.

Pearl John and Vaunie Findley together with Mrs. R. N. Gant were visitors in the Robert Findley home Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. P. H. Rhodes and Mrs. Newman Rhodes made a flying trip to Marshall, Texas, to visit Edwan Rhodes on Sunday.

Mrs. J. W. Findley visited Mrs. John Neal of the fellowship community Sunday.

The people of this vicinity are very much enthused about the present outlook for a fruit crop which promises to be unusually heavy.

Everyone seems very much elated at the approach of spring. It truly is a treat to exchange the chilling blasts of winter for the balmy days of spring.

PIPELINE

Mrs. Joe Beard and son Billy Lindsey of Lufkin were here recently.

Mrs. Effie McDougle of Mexia and Mrs. Ida Bunneton of Lufkin visited in the homes of Mrs. J. L. Gardner and Mrs. J. W. Irby last week.
