Against Interruptions to Your Electric Service

YOU probably know him as Tom or Dick or Joe, a friend and neighbor. There's nothing spectacular about him and he doesn't claim to be a hero, but his role is an impor-tant one in seeing that you get dependable electric service.

When Nature goes on a rampage and causes breaks in power lines, he's the fellow who braves driving rain, howling wind or sting-ing sleet to locate the source of the trouble and restore service with a minimum of delay. Unmindful of personal discomfort and the risk of injury, he is ready day or night to go wherever duty calls. At his disposal, if needed, are motorized line crews, skilled engineers and nearby reserve stocks of materials and supplies. All are part of an organization research for quick perion in expression.

geared for quick action in emerge Every effort is made to prevent interruptions to service, but when occasionally they do occur, in spite of all p it is comforting to know that your electric serviceman is on the but one thought in mind—to restore the flow of current as the humanly possible.
