Pneumonia is a killing disease and is contagious. It is definitely transmitted from one person to another in the same manner as other contagious diseases. The pneumonia patient should be isolated with the exception of the attendant, and all papers, letters, food, and other articles should be destroyed immediately.

Dr. Cox advises all persons attending the pneumonia patient to wear a mask and to avoid the patient's room. The pneumonia patient should be kept in a dark room and should not be exposed to light. "THEM GREMLINS" ARE BAD, PECKY PRANKSTERS... BUT THEY'RE JUST PANTY-WAIST PIKERS COMPARED TO THE "FATEEG-A-JEEBIES"

By ANGUS MCGUGIN

What if you ain't heard of "Them Gremlins" - see Illustration of the Gremlins! They're in the headlines, read about 'em in Collier's, Time, other magazines and newspapers. If a P. and U. article can tell you plenty.

To Gremlins, hunter hoping to great sport. They've been plaguing pilots over the North Pole. They're more at home, though, flying high in the clouds of the U.S.A. and U.S. cities. They're really tough.

Gremlins are just one of many kinds of little people - some good, some bad, some peck and had. The folklore of England, Scotland and Ireland drips with 'em, dwarves, gnomes, goblins, etc.

An ancient British legend explains Gremlins. A wicked lord hanged innocent people, buried them standing up. Their spirits escaped in the form of mischievous beings to haunt and plague humanity. You can laugh, but you'd better not Gremlins resent it and retaliate.

Recent press reports about Gremlins have created a flood of comment and letters to editors, with tales of pilots of Illustration of a pilot and Illustration of a Gremlin being snatched up, and Illustration of a Gremlin being snatched up, and Illustration of a Gremlin being snatched up.

"Fateeg-A-Jeebies," say reporters, "are little, peck, mischievous, some say, terrible. They snore good, mean fun. They prey only upon human beings... unless at moments their most potent weapons are hunger, thirst, and fatigue. Danger! Beware of Fateeg-A-Jeebies... they'll get ye if ye don't watch out."
