WHY RUBBERS ARE DIFFERENT THIS YEAR

It is one thing to say that rubber will be available for the first time since 1914, but it is quite another to say that it will be available for the first time since 1914. The rubber industry has been hit hard by the war, and the price of rubber has risen to a point where it is almost unobtainable. This is due to the fact that the rubber plantations in the South American countries have been almost completely destroyed by the war. The rubber industry is now in a state of crisis, and it is up to the government to take steps to help it out.

WHY YOU KNOW THAT

These were the signs of the times: The rubber industry was in a state of crisis. The price of rubber had risen to a point where it was almost unobtainable. The rubber plantations in the South American countries had been almost completely destroyed by the war. The rubber industry was now in a state of crisis, and it was up to the government to take steps to help it out.

Maybe Tomorrow...

Maybe Tomorrow we can get that all electric kitchen we've had our hearts set on... and enjoy the convenience, coolness and sparkling cleanliness that modern electrical equipment will bring to our home.

But Victory Comes First and every thing else is secondary until the war is won. That's why we're putting every cent we can spare into War Bonds. We figure that the more we work and sacrifice the sooner peace will come and the sooner we can carry out our plans for postwar better living... including that electric kitchen we've dreamed of for so long.

Tomorrow I'll work on getting my savings...
