THANK GOODNESS
 ... here's one item that hasn't gone up!
 Electricity is an exception among rising living costs
 Electricity is one bright spot in these days of rising living costs. Food, clothing, rent, furnishings, almost everything else you buy has gone up - except electricity.
 Take your own living costs on these and opening costs have risen sharply since the war, but in spite of that electricity was never cheaper than it is today. The average residential consumer of this company is getting about TWICE as much electricity for his money now as he did 15 years ago.
 Because you haven't noticed much of a change in your monthly bill, you probably have been getting better service. All the extra power you have been getting is yours for the asking. It's yours for the asking.

Anniversary Death Of Wilson Recalls Of His Reputation

Twenty years ago Woodrow Wilson died. He died broken by the utter knowledge that the cause for which he had fought was the cause for which American boys fought and died on the fields of France, had not been in victory.

A great war president, he died broken by the knowledge that the cause for which he had fought was the cause for which American boys fought and died on the fields of France, had not been in victory.

With terrible clarity the dying soldier of the Government of Nations felt that the war was fought for a purpose that was not just.

He died in the "sublime conviction" that "with another generation there will be another world war if the nations of the world do not join in the world of peace."

Wilson's death is a tragedy because, he wanted, "the best war would have been paid for in America blood and money."

He died, too, in the absolute conviction that this century would have to accept the consequences of that blood money.

"I would rather fall in a cause that some day will triumph," he said, "than to triumph in a cause that I know will fail."

Twenty years after the vindication of Woodrow Wilson is a tragedy complete. It is to be hoped that the education of the American people is also complete, for if we fail again this will be a tragedy, rather than a triumph for generations to come.

Walter Chrysler.

FARM OWNERSHIP PLANS

A few farmers, who do not own their farms, can qualify for a loan to purchase the farm of their choice. These loans are for 40 years at 7% interest and a down payment is not absolutely necessary.

John F. Walker, chairman of the FSA committee, says that every farmer can be made this year in Tyler county, so applications should be submitted without delay.

Application blanks and more detailed information may be obtained from the FSA office in the court house building, according to Edward B. Weatherly, County FSA supervisor.
