QUOTE OF THE WEEK

The Lord is holding me up. James Walter Wilson, aged 129, of Dallas, Tex., is quoted in the U. S. News.

"I believe in the full dinner pail," said Mrs. Harold Knutson, Miss Knutson's mother, in Washington.

Many women are putting the stockings and garters away, according to M. H. Frank, chief labor agent in Washington.

Our telephone conversations will add thousands of independent businessmen an even level of life, James A. Gandy, general manager, Nat. Assn. of Manufacturers.

I feel like I'm home already

As a kid I lived near the Southern Pacific Line. We got up when the "Argonaut" pulled by in the misty dawn and went to bed, to the throbs of the Sunset Limited thundering west into the night. I knew every engineer along the line and old Mr. Han, the station agent, was my buddy from the time I was knee high to a car wheel.

I just landed back in the States for my first furlough in 42 months. And stepping onto the platform of a good old S.P. train makes me feel like I'm home already.

That's the way most folks feel about the Southern Pacific—and that's the way we like them to feel. For in spite of our tremendously increased war traffic we are still trying to see that those who must travel can do so in comparative comfort. Though our services may not always meet our strict pre-war standards, there has been no relaxing of friendliness and courtesy.

We appreciate your understanding and cooperation and hope you'll give us a chance to show you again some day just how smooth and efficient friendly Southern Pacific service is at its best.
