Our Country Needs Still More Used Fats... And We're the Folks to Save them!

In between the good news about the war these days, careful readers of the paper will see grave words about a serious national shortage that has a direct bearing on military and civilian production activities.

Our domestic supplies of fats and oils will be approximately one and one-half billion pounds less than last year. Yet thousands of tons of fats are still needed to help make countless essentials for the battle and home-fronts.

While country people have been doing an even better job of saving fats than the city folks, we must remember that, because of the meat situation, we are in a better position to save. That's why we can't afford to miss a trick.

So, let's save not only the big amounts from frying and roasting, but also meat trimmings, plate scraps, and scrapings. Melt them down once a week and add the liquid fat to the salvage can. Stir, scrape and grate. Berate every part. Every drop is important.

What your salvage can is all that counts.

Fat-Salvage Bee To Aid In Licking National Fat Shortage

It's been some time we've had a shortage of fats, but just as we've always had a shortage of fats, we've always had a shortage of fat-salvage bees. Now we're trying to make up the shortage of fats by having a fat-salvage bee. The fat-salvage bee is a small insect that lives in the soil and eats the remains of dead animals. It is a very important insect because it helps to break down the remains of dead animals and return the nutrients to the soil. The fat-salvage bee is also a very hard worker. It will work day and night to help us overcome our fat shortage.
