GULF PUMP STATION

Some weeks ago we told you about the Gulf Pump Station that was being built on Jerry Carroll's farm on the Old Camden road. We can now report that the pump is in operation and has been delivering water to the Gulf tanks for several days. The pump is driven by a 100 horsepower motor and is capable of delivering 1000 gallons of water per minute. The pump is housed in a concrete building and is operated by remote control from the Gulf office in Woodville. Mr. Fisher of Houston is in charge of the station.

"Thirty Thirty" mornings when the roads are good, hens and ladies are laying and the days are getting longer, and Christmas After all, Christmas without snow just wouldn't seem half right.

NEWS EXTRA! should any emergency arise we may issue an extra, but as the days are getting longer and the nights shorter, we think it will be unnecessary. Anyway, we'll be there when you need us.

IS HEADING our envelope yellow, we take notice from time to time that some names have been discharged from the army, navy and other branches of the service. We would invite the local office to drop in each week and let us acknowledge the honor to publishing a few additional names of those coming home.

AS IN most of the good old places, the Parker News and the Dallas News and the Houston Chronicle, Monday was one of the days of holidays at the Banner office, as we do from necessity in these days of modernism. After three years on consecutive all of them capable of seven speed it seems that things should be taken up by the government of these United States. First make cars capable of attaining ONLY 60 miles an hour, and second get rid of laws governing the issuing of drivers' licenses. Now, you have to be examined to procure a license to have the privilege and be able to sign on the dotted line. Then, too, add a provision to the age of youths who in many instances are barely able to see the top of the steering wheel. We witness kids driving cars at home who would not measure up to such a law. And for some of the drivers have no license for the simple reason of their juvenile age. In this America was coming life differs.

A THOUGHT TO PONDER:

Not so long ago the Christian Science Monitor published a letter which somewhat startled many readers. The letter in question was from a woman who wanted to know just what was meant by the Bible admonition to "pray without ceasing." She really thought she was going to be told that she must spend all her waking hours on her knees. Instead, the editor explained that the admonition meant that we should be as conscious of God's presence as we are of the air we breathe. Which is a pretty good thought to carry with us through the day. Well, that's food for pondering, now to other things.

IT IS HARDLY necessary to say that we are glad to be back home and publishing the Banner once more. We have missed the boys and girls who have been away in the service, and we have missed the local office force. We say last week and as a consequence The Banner is publishing a few installments of the old letters which have been discharged from the army, navy and other branches of the service. We would invite the local office to drop in each week and let us acknowledge the honor to publishing a few additional names of those coming home. Also, we have missed the local office force. SUGAR WILL SHORT Civilian supplies of sugar for the first three months of the new year will be about the same as they are now and no change is probable in rationing, according to Temple J. Dodgen, state director. The supply allocated for all purposes totals 1,103,000 tons, of which perhaps 700,000 tons, mostly beet, continental and Cuban cane, will become available for civilians. About 40 per cent of the total will go to industrial users, of which canners will receive 1,000,000 tons, about the same amount they are now receiving. Bakers and confectioners will receive about 20 per cent and commercial users and miscellaneous distributors 15 per cent. Total civilian allocation for the present three months period is 1,130,000 tons.

DON'T GRAFT TOMATOES TO DIMPSONWEED

Washington, Dec. 1.—Great cost, concern of thinnowood, Texas ranchers and truck and fruit growers has been aroused by reports that farming interests grown upon grafting thinnowood roots. Charles L. Dear of Agriculture will not guarantee what will or will not happen to a tomato when some one fools around vegetables with a grafting knife.

Tomato roots are often attacked by a parasite worm known as a nematode, which produces a disease called root knot and causes huge losses in yield. A thinnowood botanical second cousin of the tomato, the 2nd shedding poisonous thinnowood a burning to dominate attacks.

It occurred to a composting genius of scientists of the U. S. Dept. of Agricultural Experiment Station to try grafting tomato plants of upon immune thinnowood roots.

The grafts took all right and the plants bore tomatoes but the tomatoes contained poison learned to the wood roots that fed them.

Tomato eating rabbits caught in the act of the experimental plots had become so intoxicated that they bumped into giant stalks and even against the legs of their keepers.

It may be that a tomato strain can be found that will not accept the poison from the thinnowood roots, or that a less poisonous variety of thinnowood will turn up. But unless and until that happens nematode root knot will have to be fought along other lines.

WHAT VETERANS SHOULD KNOW

On November 17 a new Veterans Administration office was established in Room 203, Lufkin National Bank Bldg., Lufkin, Texas, for the purpose of advising and administering benefits to veterans of all wars. Read these questions and answers.

Q. If a veteran contracts tuberculosis and then becomes of a conviction of insane wishes to change it back to a term policy, may he do so?

A. No. Once a National Service (term) Policy is converted to a permanent type of policy, it may not be reconverted to a term policy.

Q. Does a veteran have to pay all delinquent premiums with interest in order to reinstate his National Service Life Insurance?

A. At present and until six months after the termination of the war National Service Life Insurance may be reinstated by the payment of two premiums without interest, provided the other requirements for reinstatement are met.

Q. Is the widow of a veteran who was killed in action barred from receiving pension because of the amount of her income?

A. The widow or children of a man who died in service in line of duty, or who died as the result of a service connected disability are not barred by reason of income.

Q. Is the six months gratuity pay always paid to the next of kin of the deceased veteran?

A. It is provided that six months gratuity pay is payable to the widow or child of the deceased veteran. The only holds that a member of the immediate household of the deceased has an insurable interest in his life and need not prove dependency. The other services require proof of actual dependency except in the case of a widow or child.

Q. If a veteran dies in a Veterans Administration Facility and burial is furnished under government contract, will the $100.00 burial allowance be payable?

A. No. The family of the deceased veteran may elect to have the Veterans Administration contract funeral furnished or to have the burial furnished by, or to have the funeral furnished by an undertaker of their own choosing at their expense. If the contract funeral is requested the $100.00 burial allowance will not be payable. If the expense is borne by the family the burial allowance is payable to the person or persons who bore the expense.

Q. Do nurses who wish to be employed by the Veterans Administration, make application to the Manager of the Facility at which they prefer to work?

A. Graduate nurses who wish to make application for positions with the Veterans Administration should make their application to the Medical Director Veterans Administration, Washington 25, D. C. They should state where they trained and list their work experiences. They should express a preference as to where they want to work. It will be necessary also for them to qualify with the Civil Service Commission.

GEMS OF THOUGHT

(Open and Obvious)

The best thing to give to your enemy is forgiveness; to an opponent, tolerance; to a friend, your heart; to your child, a good example; to a father, gratitude; to your mother, conduct that will make her proud of you; to yourself, respect; to all men, charity. Balfour.

Would to God that all the people of the world, the family of nations, be brotherly and sisterly.—Gladstone.

Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness neither shadow of turning.—James 1:17.

Certain economists considered all other commodities as inferior to, and obeyed the principle of, the economic law; but they made a notable exception in favor of the Holy Bible, which they declared to be superior to all other commodities, and the most economical and desirable of any. Daily Bible Study.

It is the will and not the gift that makes the giver blessed.

The height of the great makes the gift great and greatness.—Lucian.

MERRY CHRISTMAS
a blaze of Light

THIS year Christmas will be merry again!

Make it an even brighter, more gala occasion by putting up those strings of gay colored outdoor lights that have lain idle so long. Let them twinkle a cheery greeting from your doorway, roof, trees, shrubs and evergreens, telling the world that Christmas is back, in all its traditional glory — with war's somber memories relegated to the background and peace again the keynote of a festive holiday season!

Will There Be A Steel Strike?

Not if the CIO abides by its pledged word, given only last spring

Question — What would be the general effect on the country of a steel strike?

Answer — Over 40 percent of all the factory workers in the country earn their living by making steel into useful products for American life. A shut-down of the steel industry would be a disasterous blow to reconversion and would cause a serious loss in both wages and industrial production at a time when they were most needed.

Question — Is it true that the Steelworkers Union has pledged itself not to strike?

Answer — Yes. Every contract which the Union has signed this year with the various steel companies has a clause wherein the Union agrees not to strike during the life of the contract.

Question — Are those contracts still in effect?

Answer — Yes. They were signed in the spring of 1945 to run until October, 1946.

Question — Who signed for the Union?

Answer — Its International officers—Philip Murray, Van Bittner, Clinton Golden and others—and the local Union Heads at the various plants.

Question — Is there "no escape clause" by which either side could end the agreements?

Answer — No. The Union demanded a fixed, long-term contract and got it.

Question — Why did they want a long-term contract?

Answer — In the Union's own words before the War Labor Board, "The Union's request for a termination date of October, 1946, is not made capriciously or pressed here for bargaining purposes. It represents the considered view of the Union that only such a term will adequately serve the needs of stability."

Question — Did the recent strike vote violate the contracts?

Answer — No. Only an actual strike would violate them.

Question — Haven't there been strikes already during the life of the contracts?

Answer — Yes. There were 998 strikes in steel plants during the past year alone. They were mostly local strikes which the Union characterizes as "wildcat," but they meant a big loss in production.

Question — Does the end of the war justify changing the contracts?

Answer — No. The bond was sealed on both sides and should be kept whether times be good or bad. The Steel Companies are continuing to live up to these agreements. If a strike is called, it will be in clear violation of the existing contracts.

A STRIKE IN THE FACE OF EXISTING CONTRACTS WOULD SHATTER ANY CONFIDENCE IN THE VALIDITY OF UNION AGREEMENTS IN THE STEEL INDUSTRY.

...when it was announced by [illegible] Navy Department that the Navy had taken over the plant. Mr. Wilson, President of the company, stated that although [illegible] the Company has not represented at the meeting because at the time it was in a position to do so due to pending litigation. Mr. Wilson reply to the invitation is as follows:

"Until November [illegible] this company has had no representative at the meeting because at the time it was in a position to do so due to pending litigation. Mr. Wilson reply to the invitation is as follows:

"Our only plant involved in the seizure by Navy was Ingleside with 450 employees. This plant was formerly a Government-owned plant for manufacture of butadiene used for making rubber. The oil refining operations at the plant were incidental to the operation of the butadiene plant. After the seizure by the Navy, Reconstruction Finance Corporation acting for the Government cancelled the contract for operation of the butadiene plant. This resulted in complete and permanent closing of Ingleside plant. Now operations are now being carried on at the plant and many employees have been transferred to other operations. The 40-hour week has been resumed in all other Company operations after agreement with the individual bargaining agencies representing the employees or such appropriate bargaining unit. In view of this situation we see no reason for us to attend the December four meeting and accordingly will not have a representative present."

When questioned as to the views in regard to the national labor relations board and President Truman's recommendations for legislation as outlined in each instance in the oil industry and other industries, Mr. Wilson stated that in his opinion the opposition to such legislation applies should not affect the question of the present and the view that bargaining

...the injury of the public interest. Provided only that such efforts complicate and aggravate the difficulties of bargaining and prevent full opportunity for the adjustment of differences, for the reason that they transfer the scene of action to Washington or some other unit from operations and thus tend to defeat the settlement of differences at the very source. This method holds out the hope to the parties that some one in Washington far away from the scene may bring about a better adjustment than the parties can bring at home in across-the-table bargaining and negotiations. This defeats such bargaining. Furthermore, conditions are not uniform throughout an industry or throughout the nation. The cost of labor and other conditions vary between different areas so that fact finding on a national basis is undesirable and unsatisfactory. The Department of Labor can assist in settling the strikes and disputes currently handicapping reconversion in many industries if it would refrain from endeavoring to promote industry wide and nation wide agreements and would encourage local bargaining on questions at issue at the place where those questions arise. It can offer its conciliation services in individual cases of dispute. This is in line with existing federal legislation providing for collective bargaining and is keeping with the Wagner Act which contemplates bargaining between an employer and the representatives of its employees in individual bargaining units. It is not believed that fact finding duties established by Government under such a program a satisfactory basis for the settlement of disputes in private industries. Earl Bunting Gosline, if established in connection with disputes in such industries, should be the result of voluntary agreements between the employer and the representatives of its employees in the collectional bargaining units where the issues arise, and should be limited to the subject matter agreed upon.

ROAD TO LIVINGSTON SEEMS NOW TO BE A REALITY

Resident Engineer W. M. Suter received word Thursday morning the late for last week's Booster from the State Highway Department to start road as soon as right-of-way would be secured. This has already been done, for the Cattle Co. had earlier agreed to sign through their holdings as soon as the road was assured to be really built. Good news to everyone in the west half of the county. The Willards had given up hope of ever getting to drive a new hard surfaced road to Livingston, for when we came to Woodville December, 1930, it was to have been built, and finished by 1935. However now we have a faint hope that we may live to urged him with voice and hands and heels.

Thunderhead

Thunderhead began to run. His head reached forward and seized the ground with a sizzling cut that barely touched and rebounded.

A feeling of extraordinary ease went through Ken. No effort was needed. There was no more struggling to be and the colt were one at last. The fight was over and now—this!

Mastery! Underneath him was something of such strength and power as he had never dreamed of. It surged into him. It was his own. A clump of rocks was ahead of them. Ken did not swerve—the least tightening of his knee, lift of his hands—and the stallion veered even, hardly altering his stride. The force over there by the rocks? Take it, Thunderhead, and the long soaring leap—the light landing.

Everything seemed different to Ken. He looked around. He saw, felt, apprehended as he never had before, as if he had been let into a secret world that no one else knew anything about. The wind whipped his cheeks and filled his mouth and beat upon his eyeballs and whistled in his ears. The speed. The downhill. His speed. The strange beating gait. Time long, reaching strides seemed almost slow, like the unclosed strokes of a nightmare. Then the lightning quick steal at the ground, and again the rush through thin air. No distance could stop him. There were none. They flashed over them.

The world rolled out from under the stallion's hoofs. They were covering ground Ken had never seen before. He made no effort to guide him. They were on the mountains—they were in the sky. Ghosts there, earth, strangely past. A group of antelope. He saw their frightened faces leaping their startled faces—they were gone! Ken's consciousness was filled with all that there was in the world. He had gathered it in. He was the noble beast. He was the horse! This is it!

He sat at the supper table that night in a dream, unable to speak or eat.

He wondered if Thunderhead would ever do it again. When he had disappeared and swaddled the colt and had stood looking into his face—looking into the future, his hands trembling because he knew now, beyond all doubt, what the horse could do—he saw that Thunderhead still hated him. The dark, white-ringed eye looked at him sidewayes, sickishly.

"How did the colt go today, Ken?"

He went before. And—

"Did you get him to go forward under the saddle?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you get him jumping?"

"Sort of—"

Jack Mcgeughan looked sharply at his son. He asked no more. It was a warm August evening. Tom was driving to ranch south west of town on business. He had been away all day and ate his cold supper alone. The number of his own brood mares was down to sixteen. They were getting old. He had lost four in the last two years, and two more must go, and before fall because they would not live through another winter on the range. Colorado farmers who kept a few horses stabled through the winter might buy them for the sake of the foals they would drop in the spring. They would bring very little at auction but anything would be better than feeding them to the coyotes on the Saddle Rock.

Ken was driving with him. They were on one of the back roads, not much more than wheel tracks on the prairie grass. It was at just that moment of the evening when headlights are of no use and daylight is not enough. The sun swept ahead in swirls, and at times so boldly, that Neil was about to put his foot, but one look at Ken's face stopped her. He had his angry driving look.

Neil with a new touch of her own mother and sighed. It might have been a pleasant evening. She at were enjoying a drive at the end of the day when the work was done, but if he was going to be like this—

"They don't long to go either," said Rob abruptly. At this rate, our herd of brood mares will shrink to nil."

"Couldn't you sell some of the younger mares to the Mexicans?" asked Neil. "There are those three-three-year-olds that are quite they're wonderful mares."

"Go to bed—back to their stalls, are—"

"That's the breeding isn't it? You're always talking about it."

"But you can't do it indiscriminately. They have to be picked individuals. Those aren't quite of mares good enough."

"What if you do let them stay—then Rob?"

Boy seize stared. I suppose the way I thought all the others. Travel around to the race tracks pick up horses of good blood that can't race any more.

Neil had a shocking sensation. Those boring trips that he took every three or four years cost upwards of a thousand dollars.

"I'll also buy a new stallion," said Rob, so that I can use my own young horses. That might be the best way."

"A new purebred stallion!" exclaimed Neil. "Oh, Rob! Why couldn't we just keep one of our own young stallions, not sell him?"

"That's the way to start your horses on the downgrade," said Rob coldly.

What difference does it make? The words were on the tip of Neil's tongue, but for the hundredth time she held them back. Rob must be—It's simply affectation to call him Goblin," said Neil. "That's not a Goblin. That's Thunderhead."

There was a moment's silence. Ken felt his mother's words go right through him. It had come at last. The white foal seamed inches taller. He had grown in all his parts so that he had still that appearance of maturity and strange proximity, like a box carrying a man's responsibility.

Neil leaned up at her husband. "Don't you see, Rob? He's completely changed. He's been changed ever since he was let the first time when he got those awful cuts."

"How do you mean changed?" demanded Howard.

Well sort of grown up. More dignified. Something has come into him that was never there before, and it's loosed out a lot of his rash wantonness and recklessness. We must call him by his right name from now on, he deserves it."

The Goblin is dead long live Thunderhead," shouted Howard.

What do you see in the woods?

Remember the old saying about the man who "couldn't see the forest for the trees"? Lots of people are like that. All they see is trees. Others look at the forest and see it filled with books, magazines, newspapers. They see the raw materials of many great industries which depend on pulpwood, such as rayon and plastics. They see cartons and boxes, and many other products manufactured from pulpwood.

They see jobs and wealth. Security for the workers and prosperity for the entire community. And if this forest wealth is properly harvested, it will increase in value in the years to come.

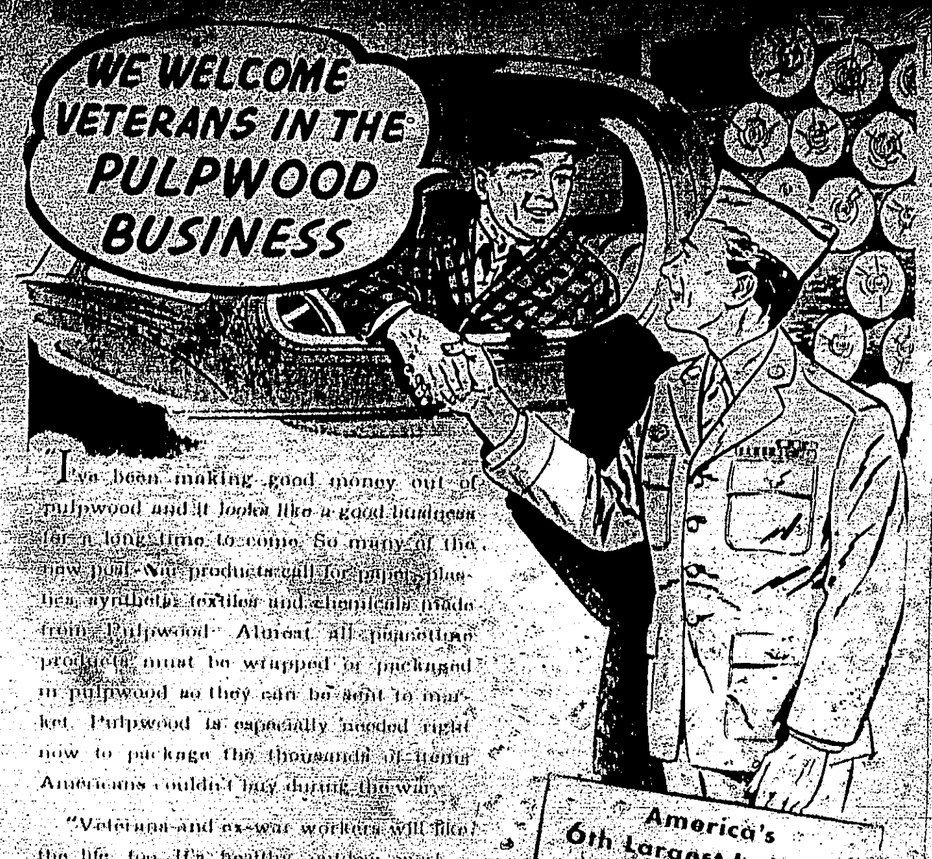
Let's take another look at our woods. Let's look at the trees and see the opportunities that lie within.

Cut This Ad Out—

If you know some man getting out of the service, or out of war work and looking for a future that offers a good income and a solid life, cut this ad out and send it to him.

Maybe his opportunity lies right here.

America's Sixth Largest Industry Offers Jobs at the Woods and at Mill. A Steady Income Every Week.



I've been making good money out of pulpwood and it looks like a good business for a long time to come. So many of the new post-War products call for pulp—plastics, synthetic textiles and chemicals made from pulpwood. Almost all packaging products must be wrapped or packaged in pulpwood so they can be sent to market. Pulpwood is especially needed right now to package the thousands of items Americans couldn't buy during the war.

"Veterans and ex-war workers will like the life, too. It's healthy outdoor work—the kind that appeals to a real man. It's a business with a future. Let's go places together."

They exchanged a flurry of blows, and Ken was surprised to find how hard and bruising the blows were. Flicka's hide, thinner on the head than on the rump, was tough as leather.

Ken felt himself getting angry. He had never been angry with Flicka before. He was angry now. He was angry at his own clumsiness, at the fact that he was not getting the best out of himself. He was angry at the fact that Flicka was not getting the best out of herself. He was angry at the fact that Flicka was not getting the best out of herself.
