about eight o'clock, she found the door open and the room dark. She went in and found the rabbit on the floor. She picked it up and found it was dead. She was shocked and she called the police.

She looked at her hand again and again. She was shaking and she was crying. She was so scared that she didn't know what to do.

Advertisement for Thomas Alva Edison's light bulb. Features a portrait of Edison and a glowing light bulb. Text: "He lighted the way to a higher standard of living. WHEN Thomas A. Edison perfected the incandescent lamp and built the first practical central station electric system, he set the stage for an era of progress and enlightenment that has raised living standards everywhere. Of all the inventions that sprang from his fertile brain, none had such a profound and far-reaching effect as these two developments in the then relatively unknown field of electricity. Without electric light and distributed electric power, women would still be slaves to drudgery, men would labor longer to produce less, and the output of farms and industry, which is the real wealth of the world, would be but a fraction of what it is today. So, on this 99th anniversary of Edison's birth, we again pay tribute to the man, who, perhaps more than any other, helped make the world a better place in which to live. Myriad lights turning night into day and the hum of motors in busy factories are lasting monuments to his genius."

LOOK UP!
A curve in the road and a hillside clear out against the sky. A tall tree topped by the autumn wind. And a white cloud riding high. You just went along that way. And all but one passed by. He saw the hill and the tree and the cloud. With the artist's mind and eye. And he put them down on canvas. For the other nine men to try.
