Thunderhead

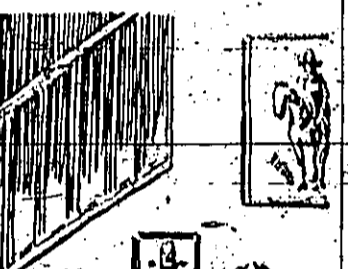

MARY OHARA

So, I'd had been doing things for her—thinking of her pleasure—all the time he was neglecting her and nearly killing her with unkindness and anxiety. The almost burst out laughing. She almost said, "How exactly like you, Robi! But Oh, how—how could all this misery and unrest be set out between them? How could they get really married and at peace together again?"

While she was observing his appearance and thinking about the old time of Ken's life to the way of the "Katie," where he had found Thunderhead, and seen the Al-bino and his herd of mares.

Thunderhead was the well cared for toward business until which he was as well no matter how old he was, and sitting opposite her at the table in the breakfast room, he seemed merely like someone who knew. Waves of almost delicious impatience went through her every few minutes. What a horrible state of affairs—that you did not feel even a little bit at peace with your husband as you had when you were engaged to him. Married all these years, a sixteen-year-old son, and again filled with the excitement and passion and frustration and fever of the very first days—only much worse.

It was not only this about manner there was a change about in Robi. His face was hard. He kept his own counsel, he held her at arm's length—all that she could understand, that something inside her. There had been some bad news about the boy. It had struck him down. Some of his vital flame was quenched. That said she tried to bend her head over her plate to conceal her face as she

"I've thought of something we could do to make the country—"

Robi had been thinking of something and thinking was a sudden, he had fastened out. Why then everything all right. Everything satisfied and arranged. Our future provided for—and everything!

"I've already started," said Robi, on her middle row. "I've written Aunt Julia. I've had a huge circle of friends and acquaintances. And two of my school friends, Adelaide Kinney and Kyrle Sharp."

"You expect them to promote your business for you?"

"Not that way! Oh, Robi! You're being simply horrible!" Nell sprang to her feet and stood by the mantle.

"I simply want to get the idea, set it to work, and let it go. I'm particularly anxious to know how that I realize you have passed on the fact of my father's will to your relatives and friends, but not to me."

"Nell was silent for a while, then drew a long breath and said, "You'd have to promote my business, they'll be glad to give me lists of the right people to write to. And they'll let me use their names as references. And I'll make a list of the people and everything, and we'd have to have pictures, and all that can be photographed, and sent to these lists of people. And this is a lovely thing, and we have the complete setup. Practically no investment needed. Some guest cabins, yes—us and Tim and you could build them; yourselves. And this is a lovely thing, and there's beautiful country to be had, and plenty of horses! And I'm an awfully good cook!"

Nell said nothing more. In a few minutes she had made out the plan. "You'd have to have pictures, and all that can be photographed, and sent to these lists of people. And this is a lovely thing, and we have the complete setup. Practically no investment needed. Some guest cabins, yes—us and Tim and you could build them; yourselves. And this is a lovely thing, and there's beautiful country to be had, and plenty of horses! And I'm an awfully good cook!"

The telephone company reports to those waiting for service

The telephone company is anxious to bring you the service you've ordered.

Telephone factories are working hard at the tremendous task of catching up with America's broken-up demand for telephone service. (More than 2,000,000 people are waiting throughout the Nation.)

In December, factories were making telephone instruments at the rate of 200,000 a month. By January, 7,000,000 instruments were being made. The great volume of switchboards, dial equipment, cables, wire—and even buildings—necessary to make these telephone work.

A comparison with returns from a similar survey made in October, 1944, would indicate that the shortage of teachers is just as acute this year as it is for the last school term.
