...are BOTTLENECKS to electrical living in the home

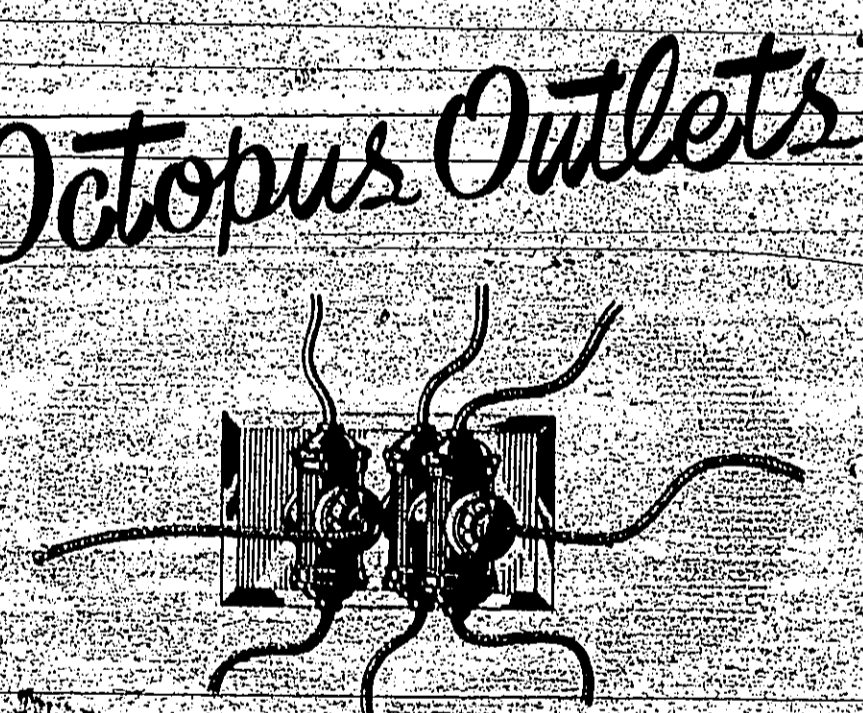

Your appliances and lamps can't give you the service you expect of them when they're plugged into "octopus outlets" like this.

When too many lamps and appliances are plugged into an outlet, they can't get enough electricity, enough power, enough light, enough heat and the fun some times flows. That's because the load at the outlet is greater than the circuit is designed to carry.

Octopus outlets "bottle-neck" electrical living. In small adequate wiring, now, but in large enough wiring, enough electrical energy flows to give you a full measure of electrical energy for all of your lamps and appliances.

Discuss adequate wiring with your electric contractor

Before you build or remodel, discuss adequate wiring completely with your electric contractor. Let him show you how little extra it costs to install full capacity wiring instead of "cheap" wiring. Don't hold up an obsolete wiring system inside the walls of your home.
