Tourist Set Record At Highway Information Center

A preliminary travel industry report by the Texas Highway Department reveals its tourist information centers played a role in setting a record for travelers last year. This total is an impressive 133,000 greater or a 17 per cent increase over 1964.

The departments information centers are located at key points-of-entry and in the regions of the state capital in Austin to provide professional travel counseling to the public.

Visitors are provided with current travel information, literature on points of interest, travel maps and information about Texas attractions. Current road conditions reports are also available to motorists stopping at the centers.
