Small School Workshop Slated In Austin July 5 = 0

What are 86 things that a small school district can do to provide services generally expected only from large districts? Thing One is to get together with other small schools and work out 85 other ways to strengthen curriculum or administrative capability.

That idea will bring an expected 500 schoolmen and women to Austin July 5-10 for the annual summer workshop of the Texas Small Schools Project, to be held at the Jester Center of The University of Texas at

The Small Schools Project is the problem-solving focal point for 130 districts in Texas which have fewer than 500 students in 12 grades. It is sponsored jointly by the Texas Small Schools Association and the Texas Education Agency, which provides a traveling staff to carry ideas from district to district throughout the state. In 10 years the project has grown from just 18 participating districts. Area districts participating include Chester, Colmesnell and Spurger.

Eighty-six is just a thin-air number -- the workshop will range through so many topics. that participants could go home with many more ideas, counting combinations and permutations.

Keynote speaker will be Dr. Benjamin Carmichael, director of the Appalachia Educational Davis, 83, a Woodville mer-West Virginia, and Dr. Lorrin Kennamer, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences Texas Tech University, Lubbock.

A series of special sessions on education about the environmental crisis is scheduled for Wednesday, July 8. Other timely topics include non-graded elementary schools, the use of teacher_aides, new laws in the state's Foundation Program, crime_and_narcotics, and kindergarten in the 1970's.

Twenty-one special interest. groups will range from teaching specific levels in elementary school through subject matter. areas in high schools. The Summer Seminar for Talented Students is scheduled in confunction with the workshop. In this small school program each participating school sends two students to Austin to take part in a variety of activities arranged by a coordinator and The University of Texas. More than 400 Texas districts are eligible for the Small Schools Project. However, participation requires a definite commitment of effort and resources.

Dale Carmichael of the Texas Education Agency is director of the Small Schools Project. Other Agency staff members working with the small schools include Mrs. Betty Gutmarin and Charles Merrill, both consultants.

Senator John Tower dedicated the first of 40 mutual help homes at the Indian Reservation Friday, Here he is shown as he greets Carey L. Cruse of Woodville. 77
