County Minority Outreach Gets Charter

W.D. According to Jerue's report, the charter was issued on February 21 and was presented to the TCMO members in their regular meeting Friday night, March 2.

Jerue further stated that the enabling of the charter would enable TCMO to expand its program. He said that as soon as suitable quarters could be found, a permanent office would be set up and staffed.

Jerue stated that the granting of the charter by the State of Texas should be adequate proof to the public that contrary to misleading statements reportedly made by some of Tyler County's minority leaders as to the purposes and objectives TCMO is a legitimate organization.

He stated that the organization was non-discriminatory, non-militant and non-political.

He says that TCMO is as its only objective the improving of the educational, social, physical and economical status of Tyler County Minorities.

Plan For The Future

COLLEGE STATION:
Make plans for the future by following a four-step guide suggested by a family resource specialist from the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University.

VALUES
After listing these values, compare them with other family members. What is important to you—what you value, the specialist advises.

KNOWLEDGE
Knowing what your values are will help in setting family goals together.

FOUR STEPS
TO THE FUTURE

Step 1. Know what is important to you—what you value. Decide what you want goals.

Step 2. Know what you have resources.

Step 3. Recognize what you have—resources.

Step 4. Apply the management process.

KNOWLEDGE

Values help determine what you want to achieve and what you want to accomplish.

Try to keep a list of what you have—resources.

Some goals are short-term while others are long-term.

However, you must understand and apply the management process.

This involves planning, controlling and evaluating.

Planning is first. The main objective is to determine our short- and long-term goals.

Controlling is next. Controlling plan and involve job and family effort in making the plan work.

Evaluation comes last.

This is looking over what has been done and what results in light of the family goals, she adds.

Warren Church To Present Play

The First Baptist Church of Warren will present the play, "Anne Armstrong," Saturday, March 11 at 7:00 p.m. The public is cordially invited to this moving drama about the life of Anne Armstrong, one of our pioneer's in Home Mission work.

Achieve these goals through the use of resources.

After listing these values,

compare them with other family members.

Remember, there are no right or wrong answers, Ms. Chenoweth continues.

HOUSTON—"Ladies and gentlemen, in the 47th Annual Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo, I'm proud to present from Fort Sill, Okla., the 'Famed Fort Sill Field Artillery Half Section.' The announcer's voice is barely heard as the seven horses pull the gun carriage and a half-section of Army artillery thunders into the arena.

Eight expert horsemen, dressed in their traditional Army uniform of the period complete the colorful depiction of the horse-drawn artillery used in the World War. As the horses race at full speed around the arena, the unit stops to fire a round from the caisson to the delight of the rodeo spectators. Another run around the arena completes the review.

Getting the team to the arena took many hours of hard work and good deal of support. The half-section was first organized in 1963 on a temporary basis by the Fort Sill Field Artillery Museum to celebrate Armed Forces Day observances. Borrowed horses were used, then in 1970 the Southwestern Association of the U.S. Army plus interested business and civic leaders of the Lawton-Fort Sill community began to organize and buy horses for the post. It was then that the artillery half section became permanent.

All the horses are still matched bay geldings, selected with the guidance of old photographs and 50-year-old specimens depicting the ideal field artillery horse. They must have the speed and agility of saddle horses, but at the same time must have the power of draft horses to pull the 3,800 pound artillery half section. Original Army manuals on the training of field artillery horses call for a minimum of exercise and training.

"Chief of Section," Philip E. Warner, handicaps seven men on the team, "team members call me 'the Chief.' The Army wants qualified men for the team and that's what Warner strives for. Being a horse expert, he has to take a written exam."

The men have to be able to handle all the sicknesses because we travel so much and do most of our own first aid," Warner said.

"Of course, this is done under the supervision of a veterinarian."

Every once in a while, Warner said he would take a team member along to help him train his horses, but showed lots of potential. One such case was Harrison "Buck" Taylor from Lubbock, Ga. "He got all of my training here (with the team)," Taylor said. "I had never even ridden a horse before." He added, "I had only watched many John Wayne movies though."

The seven men are guaranteed a year's full-time duty on the team, which means the time they receive their regular Army wages. The team is usually changed every year.

Like the rest of the team members, each of the men is guaranteed a year's full-time duty on the team, which means the time they receive their regular Army wages. The team is usually changed every year.

The team members, said sometimes a man will be kept on the team longer if "he can't get another job." Good, bad, you are a "half worker." As he continued polishing the black Army harness he added, "It's hard to find another man for the job."

Work is one of the main ingredients required to prepare the field piece, which includes the horses, many rodeos, fairs, parades, festivals and military ceremonies the artillery half-section performs. Warner said it takes four to six hours to get everything ready for a performance, and that's "if the brass is ready."

The brass he refers to is 756 individual pieces that have to be shined before every performance. The horses themselves are original 1904 equipment.

Thrilling thousands of spectators throughout the country, the artillery half-section has performed more than 40 rodeos and 116 parades last year, including the Battle of Flowers Parade in San Antonio.

In the future, tags and stickers will carry water facts along with electrical information, appliance dimensions and a description of the finishes used, she reports.
