The awards are a nationwide contest which is sponsored in this region by Palms Royal and the Houston Post. Woodville was represented at district judging in Conroe, by eleven high school students and one student from the middle school with a total of seventeen works of art.

Of the seventeen works, six were advanced to Houston for regional judging. Good key awards were won by Robert Gibson for a silk drawing entitled "Cocktail for Two"; Michael Gautreaux for an untitled ink drawing; Fred Palmer for a pencil drawing entitled "Space Creature #2"; and Wendy Watts for a silk screen print entitled "Black over Green." Fred is an eighth grade student at Woodville Middle School. His winning work will be shown in the regional exhibit at the Midtown Art Center in Houston on Feb. 3-26. Also in Friends' clothing a mixed media print entitled "Troops in the Rain" and an erasing print entitled "Before the Game" by Ronnie Ford had an air brush painting, "Soft Horizon," Robert Armstrong an ink drawing, "The G. L. Smith's Residence," James Shanley a mixed media ink "sculpture," Howard Relieford, a watercolor, "Solitude," Wendy Watts a textile design, "Rose Garden," Cyndi Nelson an embossed print, "Circulose Confusion," and our middle school student, Fred Palmer had another pencil drawing entitled "Space Creature #2".

This is an excellent representation for our school and we are all very proud of our young people.

Eagles Nest

Today we talked with Coach Troy Hollman. Coach Hollman is 53, single and is a double. He will be taken at the dance. Coach Hollman feels that each of these courses are very important in learning. "Dealing with the students" is the most important issue in teaching for Coach Hollman. He wants each student to know that he cares for them and to realize that whatever they get out of life they have to work for.

This week is F.H.A. week where F.H.A. members ask others to participate in dressing up in red and white on Tuesday. On Thursday and Friday the girls and boys will all be sponsored in a Hush Day.

Spanish classes are also preparing for the Spanish contest held at S.F.A. Students are rehearsing their poems and prose everyday in order to well represent W.H.S.

We'll see you next week with the results and combine attractions.

Bulldog Growls

The Varsity Basketball girls continue their winning streak as they rolled over the Chester Yellowjackets last Friday. One more game and their off to the playoffs. Everybody at CHS is extremely proud of our Bulldogs. Coach Moffett is doing a super job with them.

Meanwhile, the Varsity boys are looking for a win against the Bulldogs held on February 18th. The purpose is to raise money for the Beta Club trip. Everybody needs to get their teams together and have them prepared. A trophy will be presented to the team which wins the tournament.

Woodville 5th Grade Enrichment Program

A Special Visitor to the 5th Grade Enrichment Class. Mr. Jack Lambert visited the fifth grade enrichment class on February 1. He talked to us about the origin of words in our English language. We traveled back in time to the year 900 learning about words of that period. We traveled forward in time to the year 2084 to a sci-fi world on Mars. The children were studying the origin of words that we use today. He used many interesting examples and activities.

Junior High Report

If the parents of some of the kids in the Woodville Bands are noticing an increase in their telephone bill, it's probably because they've all got new phones. If, during this years candy sale for the High School Bands Spring trip, anyone in the Woodville Bands sold 45 boxes of candy they could get a telephone from the sales company. About 15 kids sold enough boxes to receive a phone. Some of the other prizes will come in next week. The Ready Writing selection for UIL was completed last week. Yours, Theirs, Ours

Alan Miller's T-WHEELER

There are three topics the T-Wheeler tries to avoid in his weekly discussions with friends in East Texas.

The Equal Rights Amendment, Religion of any persuasion, And new to the list -- soap operas at any hour on television.

The first topic draws an avalanche of nasty phone calls and letters, obviously all written by the same person using different names to influence the impact.

The second has been debated longer than man has been on this earth and is a non-win situation in the first place.

Soap operas are another of the mass audience appeal gadgets Hollywood has programmed into every waking hour apparently. And to keep up with all the plots we would suppose the viewer has no time to consider menus from day to day, but serves up TV-dinners to ease the strain on his/her cerebral capacity.

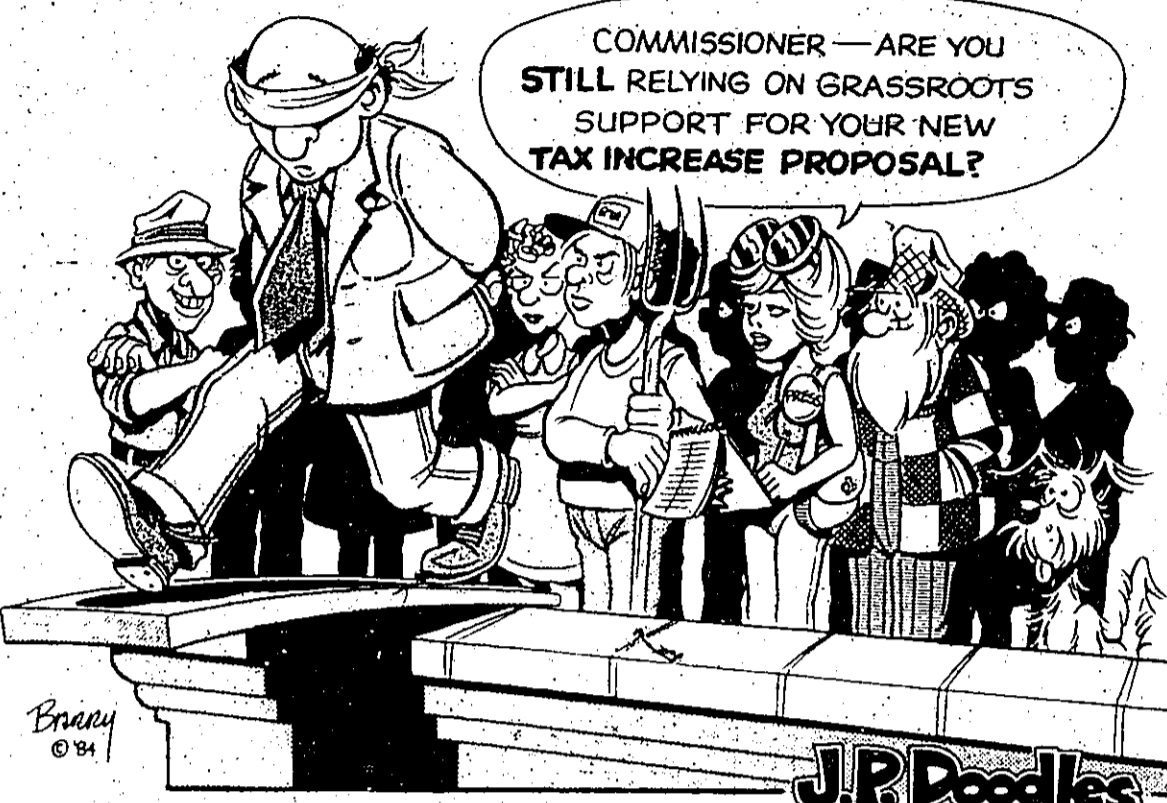

But since evening television and an occasional daily movie on pay-cable are the extent of our adventurism into things cinematic these days, a comment on car crashes and sex and dirty words might be in order. Surely we can all meet on a common ground here.

First the car crashes on nearly every dramatic program on TV. It is every day that the Dukes of Hazard had a corner on car crashes. We saw eight in the first fifteen minutes on "The Fall Guy" the other night. We don't think they really had anything to do with the plot. And it was real easy to see whether the bad guy was going to get away unscathed or not. If he was driving a junker that was manufactured prior to 1975 you could be sure it would roll four hundred feet down the highway, leap over a guard-rail, slide down a two hundred foot cliff and explode. And if he was the important star on the baddie side of the dialogue, he would scramble out of the car in an instant and run away. So much for centrifugal force.

On the other hand, if either party was driving a Porsche or Corvette, heaven forbid that a fender be scratched.

True, you have seen the Ferrari in "Magnum PI" with dirt on its nose, oil on its windshield, and tree limbs in the bonnet, but have you ever seen a fender dent or a window broken?

About bad language and bare behinds. There is where we turn out to be a little stuffy perhaps. We weren't present to march through the University of Southern California at Berkeley with a daffodil in our teeth, swearing at the professors and throwing cow manure through the windows of Sproul Hall, so maybe we don't relate to well to cuss words on television when they

Letter To The Editor

COMMISSIONER -- ARE YOU STILL RELYING ON GRASSROOTS SUPPORT FOR YOUR NEW TAX INCREASE PROPOSAL?

J.P. Doodles

Dear Citizens: Tyler County is growing. People are coming here from all parts of Texas as well as all parts of the Nation. Why? There are many reasons, but the most common are: good people; good environment; beautiful Country and good government.

We weren't there to count them, but we understand from friends with less delicate ears than ours that a recent smash at the local flick is a movie called Scarface, in which the hero utters a gutter-like Anglo-Saxon epithet 181 times. If that movie is an hour and a half long, that means he said (expensive deleted) once a minute. Taking time off for credits. Now what could that possibly have to do with the plot? And what would Al Pacino's mother say if she knew what her son was doing for a living. Course she obviously doesn't go to the movies or he would be sweeping out subway cars somewhere in Hell's Kitchen.

Give me one Clint Eastwood carrying that 44 cannon of his that looks like a piece of army field artillery. After all when you see the victim splattered all over the living room wall with blood running out the front door you don't have any question that the guy is dead and justice has been served.

If violence on television and in movie theaters warped little minds, where are all the ghous who should have surfaced after the wolf tried to eat Little Red-Riding Hood and the wicked stepmother tried to blow away Cinderella. Jack in the Beanstalk was just a latter day Eastwood dressed up in funny clothes.

Wouldn't you feel safer in your little white bed if you knew Clint Eastwood, the block warden was out there trampling your rose bushes and chasing off some creep who was going to steal your wire hubcaps?

Thanks

Dear Editor: I wish to express our thanks to all of the Tyler County citizens who donated in our annual blood drive. Our total was 281 units which is the greatest number we have ever received. We appreciate the efforts of all the various groups-Keller Industries with 45 units, Woodville High School 68 units, the various church groups with 11 units, the Lions 11 units, Tyler County Hospital and Courthouse 24 units, Wal Mart 12 units, Volunteer Fire Dept. 10 units, ABWA 2 units, and especially each individual who came and gave.

I regret that some of you had to wait while "paper work" was holding up the donors, but I assure you that your safety in giving and for the safety of the blood recipient, the time taken to answer the questionnaire and do those few tests is of upmost importance.

Thank you again. See you next year.

There has been a recent interest and public awareness of Alzheimer's disease, a progressive disorder of the brain resulting in memory loss and language. There has been considerable local interest with many residents of Woodville having close contact with family members or friends being diagnosed with Alzheimer's Disease.

In response to local interest Dr. Doug Hallmark will conduct a public awareness meeting open free to anyone who desires to know more about this complicated mental disorder. He has invited Dr. Gage Van Horn, professor of Neurology at the University of Texas at Houston along with relatives of family members with Alzheimer's to conduct a panel discussion on Tuesday, Feb. 14 at 6:30 p.m. at the Commissioner's Courtroom, first floor of the Tyler County Courthouse.

What is Alzheimer's Disease?

Alzheimer's Disease (pronounced Al-tz-hi-merz) is a little-known disorder of the brain causing loss of memory or serious mental deterioration. It was first described by Alois Alzheimer, a German neurologist, in 1906. Until recently, it was believed that only persons under age 65 developed this illness. However, new laboratory techniques have revealed that identical changes in the brain also occur in persons age 65. It is estimated that the disease affects from 500,000 to 1.5 million middle-aged and older Americans.

In this disease, groups of nerve endings in the outer layer of the brain (the cortex) degenerate and disrupt the passage of electrochemical signals between the cells. These focal areas of degeneration, have a characteristic appearance under the microscope and are called "plaques". Changes also occur in the nerve cells of the cortex, leading to an accumulation of abnormal fibers called neurofibrillary tangles. The larger the number of these two abnormalities-plaques and tangles-the greater the disturbance in intellectual function and memory.

The terms senile and senile dementia are used to describe any kind of severe mental impairment in older individuals. Approximately one-half of such persons are victims of Alzheimer's Disease; about another quarter have diseased blood vessels and the remainder suffer from a variety of other conditions such as brain tumors, thyroid dysfunction and pernicious anemia. Diagnosis of the specific type of senile or pre-senile dementia is very important since some types, other than Alzheimer's Disease, can be effectively treated.

At first, Alzheimer's Disease exhibits only minor and almost imperceptible symptoms that are often attributed to other illnesses. Gradually, however, the person becomes more forgetful. As memory loss increases, changes also appear in personality, mood and behavior. The person may neglect to turn off the oven, misplace things, take longer to complete a chore that was previously routine or repeat already answered questions. Judgement, concentration, speech and physical coordination may also be affected. Some individuals show confusion and restlessness and require special assistance.

There are many patterns in the type, severity and sequence of mental changes in this illness. They symptoms are usually progressive, but there is great variation in the rate of change from person to person. In a few cases, there may be a rapid decline, but more commonly, there are long periods with little change.

Although the person with Alzheimer's Disease is often unaware of, or may deny the full extent of his or her limitations-especially late in the course of the illness-the development and course of the illness are a source of deep frustration for those afflicted and for their loved ones.

Comprehensive blood studies, including tests for several metabolic disorders, must also be carried out.

After other diseases-many of which may be easily treatable-have been excluded, a firm diagnosis of Alzheimer's Disease can usually be made on the basis of history, mental status and the course of the illness. Periodic neurological and psychological examinations are useful in evaluating the progress of the disease.

What is the Treatment? As yet, the prevention or cure of the disease is not known. However, medical care can relieve many of its symptoms and proper guidance can assist the person and family in coping with the illness.

It is imperative that the person be under the care of a physician. The physician may be a neurologist, a psychiatrist, or the family physician or internist who can consult with a neurologist. Most important, the physician selected should have the time and interest to closely monitor treatment and to answer the many questions that arise during the variable course of the illness. The physician will also need to treat various other physical ailments that may complicate the course of the disease.

Tranquilizers can lessen agitation, anxiety and unpredictable behavior. Medication can also improve sleeping patterns. If depression accompanies the illness, it can be treated with appropriate drugs. Proper nourishment and fluid intake are important, but special diets or supplements are usually not necessary. Appropriate exercise is of value and physical therapy can help if difficulties arise in physical functioning. Alcohol should be avoided since it may add to the patient's confusion.

Activities should be maintained at as normal a level as possible. The daily routine, physical and social activities and social contacts should be encouraged. It may be helpful, when necessary, to provide simple memory aids to assist the individual in day-to-day living; a prominent calendar, lists of daily tasks, written reminders about routine safety measures, and directions to and labeling of frequently used items.

Although it is best to maintain an ordered environment so that a person does not have to continuously learn new things, it is important not to restrict him or her from trying something new. For example, an individual with Alzheimer's Disease may do very well on a trip if accompanied by a supportive family member or friend.

Doctors and other scientists have some new and better ways to help people with a peptic ulcer.

Researchers have recently found milk causes

Understandably, the person afflicted with Alzheimer's Disease finds it difficult to comprehend the changes that are taking place in thinking and behavior. Family and friends may also have questions about the course of the illness, the activities that can be engaged in with safety, how to encourage the person to carry out familiar activities that have become painfully frustrating and how to explain the memory loss to neighbors. Answers to such questions vary according to the individual and the particular phase of his or her illness. The physician or one of his associates-a psychologist, nurse or social worker-can be helpful in meeting these needs.
