All human beings need calcium but, once we pass age 60, this need can increase greatly. Some medical experts say that elderly people may need 1,500 milligrams of calcium a day because calcium tends to "leak" from the bones of older persons. If you're over 60, consult with your physiciain as to whether you might benefit from calcium supplements.

Letter To The Editor

In view of your many articles in the last few months depicting Warren I.S.D. as a "dying institution" we would like to go on record as reporting that here at Warren Elementary we are "alive and well".

We would like to recognize and ap-plaud and harmony and cooperation that exist at Warren Elementary. The teachers and staff get along well, and we have a good relationship with our principal, Neal Morgan, our superintendent, Adolph Hryhorchuk, and the Warren I.S.D. School Board. We also appreciate the attitude of the Warren Elementary parents. We have just held our annual costumes and decorations. As is true every year, we had a Standing Room Only crowd for the

Q: My husband and I bought a trailer house last year and have experienced some trouble with it. The trailer is still under warranty, but I think the company is out of business. Do I have any recourse?

A The company can be sued for the cost of the repair. It it was a corporation that has been dissolved, you can sue up to three years after such dissolution because the company was supposed to set usude adequate reserves to may its debts.

cause the company was supposed to saside adequate reserves to pay its debt. Outstanding warranties are considere habilities of the company. However, utiless the amount of money involved substantial and the defendant has assessible of the execution. It is unlike you will be able to recover your money.

The Mobile Homes Standards Act requires the trailer home dealer to supply in express written manufacturer's warrants. If the trailer house was purchased from a dealer, you may have recourse against the manufacturer on the basis of that warrants.

Q I think I need a lawyer. I ampregnant, and have a common law husband who has refused to accept any financial responsibility for the baby. In fact, he wants to separate a soon as the baby arrives. Can I make him pay for anything? Can I make him pay me child support? Whan can

I do?

A You need to consult a lawyer immediately before the baby is born, while your common law husband can still be found. Your lawyer will discuss with you several choices. For instance, if the tather will affirm paternity, child support can be ordered for your baby. If he refuses to acknowledge paternity, a hearing could be scheduled to determine who is the baby's father. As a third choice, you might want to file for dissorce from your common law husband and have child support ordered in the

Q: How is an estate settled when my widowed mother dies without a will? I am the only child and there is no property, only C.D.'s. Do these certificates have to be reported on a lax return?

A All property owned by a decedent nust be reported in the proporations, when the proporations where the same cases, the total is so mall, no tax return has to be filed.

To determine whether federal estate and state inheritance tax will be due, that the value of your mother's taxable state (including the C D s) and the mount of any taxable gifts made during her lifetime. If this totals more than 325,000 for persons dying in 1984, taxifit be due. The exclusion goes up 5400,000 for the estate of people ho die in 1985, $500,000 in 1986 and

Q: I lost my $32,000 a year job and now have one paying only $12,000. My child support playments to my former wife are $600 a month, which of course, I can't afford. Can't I go to court to get the payments eijlusted?

A: In order to reduce the appoint you must file a Minton to Modify in the court which granted the disprey you will have to show that they has been a substantial and inatethat change of circumstances lined the time the court or dered the $600 per month. The loss of pently two thirds of coef ficome should be a sufficient change of circumstances.
